Employes of A., B. & A. To "Refuse to Submit" To Reduction in Wages

Railway Labor Leaders at Meeting Here Openly Advocate Fighting. Cut, If Strike on All Roads Has to Be Resorted to.

ATTEMPT TO DECEIVE

Federation Passes Resolutions Spiritedly Condemning the Announcement of the Reduction in Pay.

ment of officials of the Atlanta, Bir aningham and Atlantic railroad that a reduction in pay among its 2,000 employees amounting to $240,000 per onth will be necessary to save the road from ruin, the Atlanta Federation of Railway Employees, representing every union, brotherhood and craft in the railway service Saturday night passed resolutions declaring the road's officials are trying to deceive the public and will not submit to any wage reduction at this time.

Railway labor leaders, who were present and made addresses, gave the situation a national aspect by openly declaring before the resolution was unanimously adopted, that the wage reduction should be prevented if organized rail labor had to call a strike on every railway in the country to block it, if this becomes necessary.

The action of the local employees federation was taken after many of the fifty or more general chairmen of various crafts and unions, rep resenting several hundred thousand employees, had warned the gathered union men that the move of the A. B. & A. was but the forerunner of a general wave of reduction that will come to all employees later.

Many Speeches. Many speeches were made by the assembled general chairmen, representing a large majority of the various railroad unions, who had come to Atlanta from Knoxville, Chat-tanooga, Nashville, Mobile, Greens-boro, Birmingham, Augusta and other points in the south to be present at the Saturday night meeting of the Atlanta Federation of Railway Employees.

The speaker then declared that Mr. Bugg had been questioned as to whether or not he would abide by the findings of the federal wage board now in session in Chiatgo, and he was quoted as replying: We expect to make the reduction, wage board or no wage board."

Mr. Smith also declared that the employes of the A., B. & A. road will appeal their case to the federaction association, was attended by representatives of the Louisiana Bankers.

Ultimate Consumer Championed at Last; Thomas to Rescue

Washington, January 8 .- A plea for consideration, for the ultimate consumer was made today by Senator Thomas, democrat, Colorado, before the senate finance committee, which is holding hearings on the house emergency tariff bill designed to protect the farmers.

"It strikes me," said Senator Thomas, "that some consideration ought to be given the consumer. Everybody comes here appealing for help. Everybody is in a bad fix. But the result is always the samestick the consumer.

"Everybody who has something to sell is seeking to exploit those who have to buy," Senator Thomas added. "Some may need relief, but so loes the consumer.

RULING BY BOARD ON COTTON PAPER SHARPLY ASSAILED

Amendment to Reserve Act Sought by Southern Senators, and Cotton Men Would Require Rediscounting of Paper.

CLAIM HARDING PLAN WOULD CREATE CHAOS

Georgia Senator Says Governor Harding "Interpreted Language of Law to Suit Himself."

Washington, January 8 .- Southern senators and cotton men appeared today before the senate finance committee to urge an amendment to the federal reserve act requiring federal reserve banks to rediscount paper of cotton factors. They sharply assailed the federal reserve board's ruling denying liscount privileges to the factors. Senator Smith, of Georgia, declared that Governor Harding, of board, had "interpreted the language of the law to suit himself," and that his position with regard to factors' paper was "utterly indefensible." Edward B. Stern, a cotton factor of New Orleans, told the committee that the plan suggested by Governor Harding that the farmers negotiate direct with the country banks in financing their crops was "impractical," because the banks would not take the farmers' notes. le declared the plan would "creat chaos in cotton marketing."

Loss Denied. Senator McKellar, of Tenness told the committee that the factors' papers were gilt-edged, and that ederal, reserve banks had never lost on loans secured by the facors. He said one-fifth of the entire cotton crop was marketed by factors who were compelled to borrow large amounts, sometimes more than $30,000, in order to make advances to the farmers and aid them n financing new crops.

Paul Dillard, president of a Mem phis, Tenn., cotton firm, testified that the action of the board was "discriminatory."

"Memphis wants the factors' pa per handled on merit, and not dis-oriminated against," Mr. Dillard said. "The ruling of the board last summer making these papers ineligible for discount was made under a misapprehension. Until that time this class of paper was considered as agricultural, and discounts permitted. After the adoption of the resolution, another was offered, calling upon various railway unions to assess their membership $1 per man for the purpose of fighting proposed and threatened wage reductions, and to hire the best legal talent to guido them through the battles, the resolution declared to be imminent. This resolution, which would have raised $2,000,000 for lawyers' fees and other expenses, was voted down unanimously.

The action of the Atlanta Federation of Railroad Employees—a new organization recently founded here, was taken after the body had been called to meet Saturday night by J. P. Osburn, its chairman. The membership of the organization extends among all railroad unions, crafts and brotherhoods, and although no members of the big brotherhoods, such as the engineers, conductors, firemen or trainmen, made addresses, it was stated that many of them were present at the meeting, and T. J. Emerson, a general chairman of engineers on the Central of Georgia railroad, was among those called upon for a speech. Mr. Emerson, who is said to have been present at the early portion of the meeting, had left the hall when his name, was called and did not respond.

Speeches, however, were made by

Other Speakers.

Speeches, however, were made by General Chairman of Machinists Nelson, bf the Nashville, Chattanoga and St. Louis railway, who came to the meting from Nashville, General Chairman R. L. Cook, of one the crafts of the Georgia and Florida, from Augusta; General Chairman Ellis, of the carmen, of the Southern railway, and others covering practically all the largest cities in the southenstern territory and representing practically every railroad in the southern states.

All these men, many of whom came to Atlanta to be present at the meeting of the A. B. & A., employees and the officials of the road Monday, were emphatic in their warnings that the wage reduction announced by the above road will be extended to other roads should it be successful and almost to a. man, the speakers advised the assembled employees to fight to the last ditch to prevent the official program of the A. B. & A. with reference to wage reduction, if it requires a general strike of every railroad man in the United States.

The legal aspect of the wage question, as it relates to the wage question, as it relates to the wage search which the government has established under the recent transportation act was freely discussed by the general chairman and others present, and it seems to be agreed to among the speakers that should the officials of the Atlanta, Birminkham & Atlantic refuse to abide by the finding of the wage board the provisions of the transportation act designed to prevent strikes would not be binding or enforceable upon the union men.

General Merting.

Announcement was made before adjournment that a general meeting of the railway employees of the southeast, representing several thousand miles of railroad and many hundred thousand employees of every railway union will meet in Atlanta profession will consider the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic wage question, with reference to action thereon, if no settlement of the matter has been reached by that time.

"Egret exceedingly circumstances beyond my control prevent my being with you tonight. Borglum's conception of the Stone Mountain monument to the great leaders of the south is one of the noblest memorials ever attempted by man to make eternal the mamory of the great leaders of a people. It will be more lasting, more impressive and inspiring than any great monument of the past. It will register in imperishable form the appreciation of a people for their leaders. As a monument and testimonial it will endure as long as the rugged earth itself. I feel sure the people of the south will carry out the work as one worthy of themselves and those great sons of the south, whose memory they honor."

one worthy of themselves and those great sons of the south, whose memory they honor."

The present plan of financing the gigantic project, which will ultimately require some $2,000,000 and six to seven years of work, as set forth by Mr. Borglum and Don Alfonso Louis de Bourbon, half-brother to the King of Spain, involves the production of a stupenduous motion picture, based on the life of a well-known southern woman, which will tell more vividly than words could ever paint the story of the "lost cause."

In this way it is hoped that the interest and sympathy of the southern states may be so aroused as to insure the full support by the people at large.

In the meantime no time will be lost in the actual work on Stone Mountain,, Mr| Borglum has sufficient money in hand to commence the task and confidently expects to carve the head of Lee on the lost of the production of the plot is woren about the thrilling scenes of a warton southland.

The denoument comes when a winsome southern girl sacrifices with sacrifices for northern lover at the dictal day who requests the sculptor to carve on Stone Mountain the dying lion is that girl. Through the long years she has remained faithful to the sacrificed, and now pleads that a memorial be suffered, as one among a people.

The scultor draws from the woman with strong the long of the gray hosts as they might be hewn high up upon the granite face of a mountain. The picture will close with aeroplane of the granite face of a mountain and views of Stone Mountain and views of the entire project.

He spoke tactfully, but frankly,

He described with beautiful feeling the symbolism of the proposed carving, telling how the groups of cavalry, artillery and infantry will appear to be marching over the crest of the granite batholith and rounding its weathered sides with a splendid sweep of action and superb realism, thus portraying the holding their crops to foster specupassing of the Gray heroes. With a keen psychological vision Mr. Borglum observed that the feelings of the south bearing on the Civil war are now in suspension and that they will never be satisfactorily rested until some memorial is erected adequate to the immor-

Problems such as these are merely suggested, while the main theme of the story deals with two fascinating love episodes which breasted the fire and hate that divided north from south in the sixtles. The scenario for the picture has been written by Prince Louis, who is an eminent art student and author and has spent the past year in this country studying American history. The production of the picture will cost approximately $65,000, half of the amount already having been subscribed in Virginia, North Carollina and Tennessee. Within sixty days, Mr. Borglum says the actual taking of the picture will begin. The picture can be sold outright it is stated for $150,000, or exhibited bringing a much larger sum.

Mr. Borglum briefly related the history of the confederacy on Stone Mountain. He told of his own labors to raise the money after the association had failed and declared that he will not again undertake any responsibility relating to the blem on one side of the room and the American flag on the other. The vivid colors of the two insignia were caught in the crystals of the chandeliers.

Mr. Borgium pointed out that intense interest has been manifested all over the United States with one exception, and that exception is Atlanta. "The one city which will be advertised to the nation and have its name carried around the world by the consumation of the memorial has never contributed one cent to the enterprise."

Santhemums and narcissi with bow knots of blue tulle completed the color scheme.

Cedar and holly berries were used effectively in the detail decoration of the table, with American smilax. A feature of the dinner were the mountain and the work of Miss Blondelle Malone, the well-known artist and kinswoman of Mr. Venatics an clan, whose work is attracting great deal of attention.

'Loose Thinking," Which Made Country "Rumor Ridden," Blamed for Commercial Depression.

St. Louis, January 8 .- The condion of business in the United States is basically sound, and fear for the welfare of commercial America is due principally to "a state of mind" -a natural consequence of the war. This is the gist of the results of an economic survey conducted by the Mississippi Valley association and announced tonight at the headquarters of the organization here. Questionnaires sent to business men. bankers, agriculturalists and economic students in the twenty-seven states in the "valley" were answered by 3,000 persons. Many asserted no additional system of credits is needed and but few laid the blame of business conditions to the present system of tax-ation and the so-called restriction of credits.

That "markets are no longer honestly competitive" and that "a small degree of control by monopoly" has affected market conditions were assertions of certain respondents; while others declared that a lot of "loose thinking" had resulted in the country becoming "rumor-ridden," some emphasized that too much publicity had been given to "depressing rumors."

the matters were taken up. Although the chairmanship of the committee was changed by the new chairman of the board, the personnel remains the same. The committee is composed of Dr. W. L. Gilbert, chairman; J. Oscar Mills and Paul S. Etheridge.

Mr. Etheridge, who was elected chair a not the commission at its annual meeting last week, stated Saturday that the board would make ev. y effort to reduce the rate of taxes for 1921. He stated that he hoped that the county would be able to operate all departments, and to carry on the highway work, without exceeding the income. In this way, he stated that he would obviate the necessity of borrowing money in anticipation of taxes. The county rate is now $1 per $100 and the state tax rate 50 cents per $100.

Mr. Etheridge pointed out that the county now has between 500 and 600 convicts—more than any recent year. This will enable the county to do practically all its own road work, which constitutes a large part the expenditures of the commission. The price of materials has also been reduced, thus ging greater, opportunity for economy in carrying on all county operations. Heretofore it has been necessary for the county to let out much of its construction and rerish work to private contractors, on account of the small force of convicts. There are now four convict camps in the county, an additional camp having been opened within the past few days.

"The power developed from the dam would go to industrial plants and not to the Alabama company," said Senator Underwood, adding that there was nothing upon which to base such charges "except theories."

Special interests have been attempting to get appropriations for their own benefit ever since he has been in congress, Senator Lenroot asserted. He told the senate that in 1919 an attempt was made in the house to get an appropriation of $13,000,000 for the improvement of Muscle Shoals, with the intention to lease it to the American Cyanamild corporation, "one of the largest members of the so-called fertilizer trust we hear so much about now," Both of the senators from Alabama, then members of the house, voted for the effort, he continued.

It is now charged that Mr. Washburn, head of the American Cyanamild corporation, member of the so-called "fertilizer, or to sell it to the pending bill, he declared. There is sothing in the bill that requires the sorporation to manufacture one ton of fertilizer, or to sell it to the farmers. Senator Lenroot declared the measure is in no sense a farmers relief bill. Under its provisions, with the consent of the secretary of the corporation for an indefinite period to a member of the "so-called fertilizer trust."

This recalls a conference I had with President Obregon at Nogales, Mexico, in September, 1919, at which he assured me that in the event of his election in the forthcoming na-tional elections to succeed Carranza, then president, that it would be his first and paramount aim to reestablish old-time trade relations between Mexico and the United States, and to promote the freest and fullest commercial good will between the two countries consistent with their commercial treaties, and the national rights of the respective nations.

With reference to this matter, Senator Harris today addressed the following letter to John A. The ports of Savannah and Brunswick, in my state, are fine harbors with rapidly increasing tonnage.

Hollomon Declares This Government Will Insist on/ Cuban Wormalcy.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON. Washington, January 8 .- Despite statements of the state department to the contrary, which are only natural and diplomatic under the cir cumstances, it is now known that General Crowder's mission to Cubaadvise the warring political factions on the island that while another inon the island that while another in-tervention on the part of this gov-ernment is not sought, and wholly undesired, a restoration of business and political normalcy demands an immediate adjustment of existing differences and in the event of fall-ure this government will proceed to exercise its protecting prerogative sunder the provisions of the Piatt amendment.

the island, and from complaints of merchants, manufacturers and bankers in this country as to the stagnation in Cuban trading, following the moratorlum existing in that republic, that further patience is not regarded as a virtue, hence the dispatching of a senate committee to the island to get at the bottom of things is an early assurance. This committee will go to Cuba while General Crowder is there and confer with and work in co-ordination with him.

Dr. Angelo, a member of the Cuban liberal party, now in Washington, made the startling statement today that "law and order have almost disappeared from the Cuban today that "law and order have almost disappeared from the Cuban republic."

It will be recalled that this government has twice intervened in Cuba since its independence, under the provision of the Platt amendment. An intervention of this kind always represents, for Cuba, a constitutional act and is not only in the interest of international adity, but always welcomed by the Cuban people as a friendly and much-desired act on the part of the big protector to the north.

The Platt amendment has always been a stabilizing influence in Cuban politics, and this government would be dereliet in its duty in a crisis which seems now to exist not to exercise it provided an amicable restoration of domestic harmony could not otherwise be secured. It is hoped, however, that General Crowder's fine diplomacy may bring decided results to pass without intervention.

STATEMENT.

Washington, January 8.—In a statement tonight commenting toom the Crowder mission to Guba, Dr. Don Carlos Manuel de Cespedes, the minister of Cuba here, expressed confidence that the conferences between his president and General Crowder would "be very beneficial." The statement follows:

"General Crowder was received with great cordinity by the president, and the initial conference they held was highly satisfactory. I have very reason to believe that the conferences between the president and General Crowder will be very beneficial to the interests of the United States and Cuba.

"The problems of Cuba will find their best solution in the measures that will be taken by the congress of Cuba to settle the economic and financial crisis, as there is no problem in Cuba that cannot be solved satisfactorily within a short time.

"In addition, the patriosism of the Cubans themselves will. I am sure, dispel from the political atmosphere all disturbing circumstances that may seem to prevent the political parties of Cuba from reaching a convenient national understanding under the laws and constitution of Cuba that must and will be unheld."

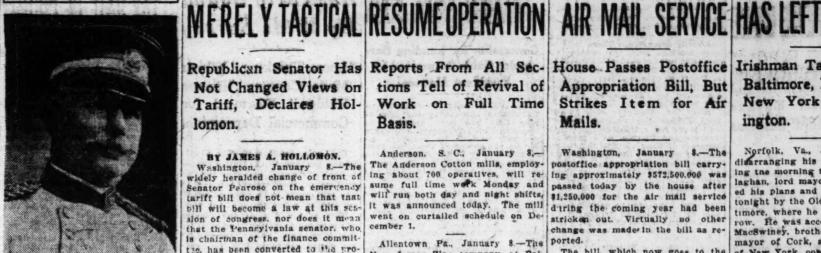

CUBAN CANDIDATE TALKS WITH CROWDER

Havana, January 8.—General Jose Miguel Gomes, the liberal candidate for the presidency of Cuba at the recent election, boarded the United States cruiser Minnesota shortly before noon today for a conference with General Enoch Crowder, here as the representative of President Wilson to discuss questions mutually concerning Cuba and the United States.

The reticence that has been in evidence regarding all of General Crowder's conferences since his arrival here was observed in connection with his talk with General Gomes today.

National Retail Dry Goods Association Files Proposed Taxation Program With House Committee.

SALES TAX ADVOCATED ON ALL KINDS GOODS

Would Raise Income Tax Exemption to $2,500 for Unmarried and $5,000 for Heads of Families.

Washington, January 8 .- A com prehensive program for recision of the federal tax laws, estimated to annually the $4,000,000,000 which Secretary Houston has said the treasury required, was filed today with the house ways and means nmittee by the tax committee of the National Retail Dry Goods as-

The plan worked out by the trade organization contains several pro-posals not heretofore advanced, including the assessment of a federal poll tax of $5 on each person over 21 years of age who receives an independent income.

Income tax exemptions, it is proposed, would be raised from $1,000 to $2,500 for unmarried persons, and from $2,000 to $5,000 for heads of families. All business would be allowed an exemption of $5,000.

Other features carried in the rogram, which was approved through a referendum of the organ zation's 2,000 members, provide

The program would eliminate rom the present revenue act the lividuals, taxes on transportation nsurance, admissions, dues and on non-alcoholic beverages and special nd capital stock taxes, stamp taxes nd certain excise taxes.

The normal incine tax rate would be fixed at 4 per cent on the first $4,000 above the exemption, while the remainder would be subjected to circles, officials say, and proved to tax of 8 per cent, and no surtaxes rould be levied.

Income from business institutions would be taxed at 10 per cent on nounts above the exemption. this connection, a statement by the ciation officials explained that distinction had been made in their program between manual or mental efforts, and the results of business nvestments, the latter being re-uired to bear the heavier burden. Surtaxes

All other incomes, including "unarned" or investment income and profits, would bear surtaxes ranging from 1 per cent on incomes from $20,000 to $50,000, to 6 per cent in incomes in excess of $500,000. Estimates compiled by the asso dation committee placed the revenue from the $5 poll tax at $80,000. 000 annually. From income taxes of all kinds proposed in the plan, it was estimated the revenue production would be approximately $1,823,000,000. Customs receipts were placed at $360,000,000, and the sales tax, which the organization proposed with a rate of 1 per cent, would pield $1,816,500,000.

Did you ever go into a hovel and then visit a beautiful building of marble and luxurious furnishings?

If you did, then you know the force of the contrast that nurses of the Grady hospital feel in changing their abodes from the former ill-equipped and unlovely home to the splendid, new structure in which they have been living since last September, and which is now practically complete.

ing room and other recreation rooms.

The second, third, fourth and fifth floors provide rooms for the nurses, there being 16 single rooms and 40 double rooms, each fitted to fill the needs of their inmates and to provide comforts that were totally unknown in theold home. On each of these floors also, there are shower baths and tubs, and an elevator in the center of the building makes walking up and down strairs unnecessary. On the top floor there are a library and demonstration and class rooms. The home was made possible by generous donations by the heirs of the late Joseph Hirsch, who was chairman of trustees until his death, and has been in course of erection for a long time. Its value from a standpoint of nursing efficiency cannot be over-estimated, officials assert, and it also means much to Atlanta from a standpoint of civil progress.

Customs Receipts.

Customs receipts, however, were calculated on the basis of the present revenue act, and did not take into consideration the contemplated changes now being worked out by the house ways and means committee.

Likewise, the estimate of collections from the sales tax was said by the association representatives to be very conservative." and they predicted that one-half of 1 per cent may be ample to raise the revenue needed to complete the $4,000,000,000 budget.

Prices asked government departments for coal as set forth in the committee's report, the acting attorney general said, appeared to warrant and "even require" investigation by the department of justice. Prosecutions will be instituted and pressed to the limit, he added, should the facts developed by the investigation bear out the evidence submitted by the committee. It would appear on the face of the report, Mr. Nebeker said, that prices charged the government for coal were exorbitant to a degree, and that action lie under the Lever act for profitering. The names of more than a score of concerns who had supplied coal to the government were listed by the committee, he added, but would not be announced, pending an investigation which would include a study of statistics of coal costs, prices charged and the committee's estimate of what would have been a fair margin of profit.

A decline in the price of retail coal was said to be indicated in reports reaching the coal investigating committee today from chambers of commerce and municipal authorities in various parts of the country. Tabulation of these reports is being made for use, committee members said, should it be decided to conduct an investigation of retail coal distribution, as was suggested by senators during a general debate of the coal problem.

Conversation Over Phone.

In preference to the interview with Mr. Chambers, printed in The Constitution of Saturday morning, there was no intention to misquote the vice president of the polico board. The conversation was telephonic and there must have been a misunderstanding of his words.

However, the reporter who talked to Mr. Chambers is quite sure that the attorney did suggest that Mr. Boykin could be summoned as a witness before the board if charges were preferred against the officers named in the grand jury presentments, and that this could be made the basis of legal action in a court of record that might bring out the testimony given before the grand jury.

The reporter, who wrote this interview, is one of the most accurate and experienced men on The Constitution's staff. He was, of course, under the impression that he was correctly quoting Mr. Chambers when he prepared the interview for publication. The Constitution's faith in the reliability of this member of its staff makes it confident, therefore, that the remarks accredited to Mr. Chambers, which he now denies, were as a result of a misunderstanding due to the fact that the conversation was over the phone.

The reasons for the slump in alcoholic addicts at first were given by the commissioner as "fear of death" from wood alcohol charge of the follow-up work of the timidity on the part of saloon keepers and lack of organization of the bootleggers. As time went on, however, every one concerned has become bolder, he said.

OFFER FOUNTAIN PENS AS PRIZES

IN CITY SCHOOLS

The Conklin Pen Manufacturing company, of Toledo, Ohio, has offered prizes of 365 fountain pens, one to each grammar grade in the city schools, beginning with the third, for improvement in penmanship during the year.

The school children have written a 150-word essay and at the close of the contest in May each child will write the same article again for comparison. The work will then be collected by schools and forwarded to the A. B. Palmer company, of New York, whose writing system is being taught in Atlantaschools, and they will judge the work and name the winner in cach grade and school.

In addition to a prize of a pen in each grade, the conklin company has offered four grand prizes, first and second to boys and girls who make the greatest improvement in penmanship during the year in the entire school system. The first grand prizes will be gold fillgreed pens, valued at $16, and the second prize pens, with a gold band, which sell for $7.50.

W. C. Lowe, writing director of Atlanta schools, through whose efforts the gift was obtained and the contest launched, states that no penmanship contest of such magnitude has ever been "pulled off" in any other "city in the country, and that Atlanta, as usual, is setting the page for others to follow.

John W. Grant Shows to bunshine, accompanied by lower temperatures, before the close of to-How Atlanta Will Profit day, stated C. F. von Herrmann, offiby Improvement-Prominent Citizens Active in Movement.

That now is the time for a definite understanding between property owners and city and county authorities regarding the widening of Peachtree street, and the legal establishment of the city's policy opinion of John W. Grant, one of the most prominent holders of real estate on Atlanta's principal thorer in the recently revived movement to have the street widened from its present 60-foot roadway to

Mr. Grant, who has many times expressed his views upon the imartistic improvement as well as enhancing the utility of Atlanta's streets and avenues, gives many prove Peachtree street between the venues mentioned above should be looked upon as vital to the city's tion just at this time.

Chief among these reasons, as Chlef among these reasons, as given by Mr. Grant Saturday morning is the fact that the building line on Peachtree street at this time is very irregular. Many of the old buildings, as well as some of the new ones, are constructed along the old building line, while a large proportion of those buildings erected since the city announced its intention of adopting a policy of a wider Peachtree street are set back ten feet in conformity with the new line.

Grant's Suggestion.

Grant's Suggestion. Mr. Grant also called attention to the fact that the work of widen-ing of Peachtree will be much less expensive now than it will be if not done before the white lights are put down.

"Now is the time," said Mr. Grant,
"for this work to be done. The property owners, I believe, are, in

"The question of finally estab-lishing a building line on Peachtree street upon a basis that would be l gal in every respect," continued Mr. Grant, "should be settled at this time."

this time."

Mr. Grant discussed the great need that Atlanta is facing now for afequate arteries of traffic in various portions of the city, and declared that the widening of Peachtree street between the points mentioned above would serve to solve in a large way the growing traffic problem on the north side. It will also greatly beautify this street, which is almost as famous as Atlanta itself, said Mt. Grant.

Property Owners Active.

Property Owners Active. Other property owners, including C. P. Byrd. Walter T. Candler, G. F. Willis, W. L. Peel, F. G. Corker and Marion C. Kiser, who have been led in the movement for several months by J. L. Dickey, have worked tirelessly toward bringing about this important improvement, and it is confidently expected that the matter will be pushed with such defermination by those interested that Peachtree street will have been improved and turned into a magnificent boulevard before the end of another twelve months.

Expressions from both city and county authorities have been made public, all of which seem to greatly favor the Peachtree widening, and with the property owners almost a er property owners, including with the property owners almost a unit regarding the importance of the project at this time, it is expected that the city of Alanta and Fulton county will work out a division of the expense in such manner as to make the work practicable. The property owners having appeared before the county authorities urging the improvement and being told that a proposition should be made to the city fathers regarding the expense of the construction, will appear before the finance committee of council at an early date to secure an expression as to the ability and inclination of the muability and inclination of the mu-nicipality to do its part of the work.

Motion picture theaters in Atlanta may be assessed the same rate of special tax as that paid by legitimate theaters and vaudeville houses, if Colonel E. E. Ten years ago the county commissioners levied a special tax of $150 a year on legitimate and vaudeville theaters, and only $30 a year on motion picture theaters. The Committee

On Literature. Miss M. Virginia Garner, well-known in Georgia through her work in journalism in Wesleyan college and in Mercer university, has accepted the chairmanship of the committee on literature in the Geor-

Miss Garner has unusual fitness and training for this work. Before she decided to devote herself to journalism she was a teacher of English literature in a large college for men in Japan, and later in Woman's college, Montgomery, Ala. In Japan she was regarded as a specialist, both as a teacher and as a lecturer on literary subjects. While teaching in Woman's college it was through her lectures and programs prepared for clubs that she became a leading spirit in the woman's club work of Alabama.

Miss Garner holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Vanderbilt university, a Master of Philosophy from the University of Chicago, and has done graduate work with specialists in the leading universities. She has studied with Drs. John M. Manly, W. V. McClintock and Richard Green Moulton in the University of Chicago; with Professor Brander Matthews in Columbia university; with Professor W. G. Bleyer in the University of Wisconsin, and with Professor George Pierce Baker in Harvard university.

Miss Garner is the author of numerous articles on literary and religious subjects, and of criticisms on books and plays. One of her most scholarly pieces of work is an introduction and notes to an edition of Poe's Tales.

In her special work with clubs she has arranged many programs which have been given successfully by women's clubs in both Alabama and Oklahoma. These programs include studies in Shakespeare, modern drama, the Celtic Revival, the Romantic Movement, Russian literature and American humor.

In the many activities in which the federated club women have been called to engage, especially during the period of the war, they have not had the time to give to the more cultural lines of club work of which the department of literature is a most essential one.

When it is recalled that one of the principal purposes for which the federated club movement was first organized was for self-improvement, and study along lines where it was most needed, it is obvious that a revival of interests in literary study and scholarship is a most

The fact of the more practical activities (so-called) which have come in to club life among women, and which will, it is hoped, continue to stay, should not mean that literature and the more cultural lines of work should be sacrificed.

There never was a time when there was greater demand for highly educated cultured women, and for scholarship among them, and it is a matter of rejoicing that a woman so gifted and experienced as Miss Garner, and so blessed with a charming social initiative, should have accepted the appointment of chairman of literature to the Gor-

Good Roads And Forestry.

Club women are urged to be active in their co-operation in all movements related to good roads and forestry, for both in Georgia are in need. Much has been said about both, but the general results are not encouraging. At this season of the year when tourists are attracted in this direction, many more of them would come if they could come in their motor cars. When they do come poor roads make travel almost impossible, while the condition of the forests show an utter disregard of our forestry assets and lumber interests.

Women can not hold themselves entirely responsible for the conditions as they are, but they can prove and influence the power in improving conditions.

Every club in every district should have a committee on good roads and one on forestry, and these women should in the beginning of the new year find out the other agencies in the community working in these directions. If there are no other agencies, let the club

"We blew and blew and called and called. At last a little head peeped out, and we heard 'Oh, mother, it's Santa Claus!' Then they poured out not by twos but it seemed by dozens.

"The mother, with a babe in her arms, said: 'We were just saying how we didn'to think no Santa Claus wuz coming this year, as it were too cold.'

"Among the crowd was a little barefoot, big, brown-eyed boy of five. As he gazed and gazed at y Santa Claus the glits fell from his little fingers as he whispered in awe. 'Santa Claus!"

During March, April and May of 1919 Dr. Morton was invited to speak in various colleges on the "History of Serbia," and she so convincingly set forth the part that brave nation played in the world war and the present wrecked conditions, including the destruction of the University of Belgrade, that the colleges she addressed at once offered scholarships to cover a period of four or five years to students whom she was authorized to select. The student body in a number of colleges, members of the alumnae, friends of the college, church and club groups, subscribed a fund to cover the expenses of a first group of twenty students.

Dr. Morton went back to Belgrade and presented letters of invitation from the American colleges to the minister of education and asked him to appoint the students.

Stroudsburg. Pa., played Santa Claus. He came to appeal for tariff protection of toys, particularly celluloid toys. Every time American ingenuity turned out a new and appealing toy, he said. Japanese imitators duplicated it and shipped overtons for sale at a lower wholesale rate than American factories could make.

To support his argument; Mr. Foote came armed with a huge box of toys, a regular carload lot, even for a Santa Claus sled. He exhibited them to the committeemen, seated solemnly behind the great horseshoe desk, on its high platform, which lends pomp and circumstance to ways and means committee deliberations.

His argument finished, Foote said he had no further use for his exhibits and the scramble began. The solons shucked off years as they shick their clothes at the old swimmin' hole. They were boys again in a second, and when the rush stopped the toy box was swept clean.

A Missionary's Comment On Women's Costumes.

The story is often told of the missionary who, being asked on his return from a dinner party in Washington City, what the women wors, remarked to his wife: "I do not know, I did not look under

Now comes-the story of a missionary who was at home on furlough, and was invited to a dinner at a great summer resort, where saw and met many women. After dinner he went to his room and wrote a letter to his wife,

"Dear Wife: I've had dinner at the great Hotel company was wonderful. I saw strange things today. Many women There were some who were, to my certain knowledge, one church, forty cottage organs and twenty libraris."

In his great longing for money to provide for Gospel for hungering millions, he could not refrain from estimating the silks, satins and liamonds of the guests at the dinner in terms of his people's needs. He might easily see one church in the $100,000 necklaces women requently wear, forty cottage organs in the expensive fur wraps others wear, and the twenty libraries in the gold mesh bags, jeweled lorgnettes or those wonderfully expensive Paradise plumes some women now wear at right angles on their hats which endanger the eyes of a missionary who approaches them from before or behind. The missionary probably does not object to women being well dressed, if they can afford it, but dealing with facts, the missionaries and preachers read on the one hand of children starving in central Europe, and on the other hand the facts compiled by the government of the millions of dollars expended in this country in one year for the non-essentials, among which diamond necklaces, furs and Para-dise plumes are classed. They conclude that thrift would be a good observance to get the greater number of people in the world back to the normal status, when some of the money expended in the nonessentials might be translated into churches, cottage organs and libraries, and to the funds which might be used to convert souls.

No one likes or condones the narrow-minded prating of the cen-sors who would deprive the world of beauty and joy, and the pleasurable things, but one can see how the thoughtful man feels when he sees so much being worn by butterflies when the world-carriers of civilizations—the churches—are limited and children starving for

A Wail From Many Little Voices

The wall from many million little voices from Europe is reaching the heart of the American people, and they are being asked to answer the call by subscribing the necessary funds, not only to nourish these children to keep them from starving, but to so nourish them that they may live and grow and become useful citizens, to help make our after-

When one sees the results of unrest and the monetary scarcity threatening certain institutions of a country which was scarcely touched by the war, and certainly not on native soil, it is easy to imagine the conditions in those countries where children were bereft their fathers through war, their mothers through hardships, and their every relative by the complexities of war, and who remain the wards of civilization.

These children, we are told, are victims of many forms of disease but not incurable, and today they are extending their little arms to manity-loving America for succor. The European Relief Council has been organized to answer the made in this country, and Atlanta has her branch of the committee, which includes the American Red Cross, the American Friend Society (Quakers), the Jewish Joint Distribution Commttee, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Knights of Columbus, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A.

The period of time dating from December 29 until January 15 has een designated for collection for the relief of the little children of Europe, and to this part of the country and to this community the appeal is being made now. It is essentially a call to humanity—the call upon the human heart for the relief of millions of little innocents who have nothing to do but die-unless the God-fearing and Godloving people come to their rescue.

Take, for instance, the effect of the individual little child standing ill alone with its arms extended asking aid outside your door-could

"As chairman of the entral committee of the American Red Cross," writes Doctor Ferrand, "I weel it my duty to make special appeal to the members of our society to assist to the utmost in the joint movement that is being undertaken to save the world from another terrible catastrophe. "Further," cites Doctor Farrand, "it should be remembered by bers of the Red Cross that the fourth roll call, which we have just had, was for the purpose of maintaining the organization for the ensuing year and that the annual dues, which provide for the carrying on of the regular peace-time program, are not available to meet a great emergency, such as confronts us in connection with the child problem Never, in any emergency, does the American Red Cross fail to do its part; and the emergency service of the immediate pres-ent is to provide a fund for the carrying out of the general relief work that is to be rendered by several agencies. In this connection I desire to call the attention of chapters to the fact that contributions for emergency purposes may be made from the surplus in chapter funds; and in my official capacity I urge that there be generous action on the part of chapters in contributing to this fund for joint child

In Novel Ideas

Is Paris out of ideas? or has the influence of the reformer reached the French city?

These are the questions which arise in the minds of many who are studious of the fashions, their general tendency and detail.

The prevailing idea which comes so far with Paris models is the long lined gown called by some the "chemise" effect. It shows an indefinite waist line, a fuller skirt, than that of last season, but still narrow; and a broad sash or ceintine, generally of a contrasting material, to the remainder of the gown.

The other idea, which is still struggling for ascendency, introduces a draped skirt, called by some the "DuBarry," and is generally seen in the evening models.

Carry Plaja Bodice.

Carry Plain Bodice. Carry Plain Bodice.

These draperies carry a plain bodice, and generally something of a sleeve and some French flowers. Heavy embroidered net, braded net and lace are used as a trimming, on evening gowns, and for costumes en train, heavy brocades are still worn. There is variety enough in materials used, but there is apparently a scarcity of ideas, and so far, the two models would seem to indicate that there is less to attract women to purchase a great quantity of gowns or what is generally known as an elaborate trousseau.

Skirts Still Short.

The brevity of skirts still prevails, as a leading mode and for evening a scarcity of sleeve. Sleeveles gowns try the most expert of dressmakers, for unless the corsage fits perfectly, the scant sleeve is difficult to hold the gown steady and in place and women are sleeve is difficult to hold the gown steady and in place, and women are noted continually adjusting their gown, and keeping on the corsage by the scanty strap or beads used in the average gown.

It would seem that even the fashions are being influenced by the restless uncertain spirit of the restless uncertain spirit of the restless and that designers were uncertain as to just what would please the feminine taste, hence the uncertainty of models, and their lack of striking and original features.

the results will be, the question is justified: "Is Paris out of ideas?"

Southern Artist Proving Success In New York City

miss Blondell Malone, of Athens,

She has a studio on Fifth avenue, but will visit Alken, S. She spent last year in Atlanta as the guests of her kinswoman Mrs. Frank Tucker Mason, and while here visited and painted pictures of a series of Atlanta gardens, among those garden scenes is those of Mrs. Robert Foster Maddox and Mrs. John W. Grant.

Other pictures done by Miss Malone attracted the attention of art lovers here, and her pictures were exhibited under the auspices of the Atlanta Art association, and subset of the Atlanta Art association, and the art of the Atlanta Art associatio

At the outbreak of the war she returned to this country, where she has remained successfully pursuing her work, first in the south, and more recently in the New York art centers.

In all but a few states, where there are 'community property laws," the property which is the product of the joint labors of the husband and wife inside and outside the home belongs to the husband. In other states the father is the legal parent of the child and may will its custody to someone other than the mother at his death. In every state the husband has the right to choose the domicile and a wife must live in a place which he selects or be guilty of desertion, even though she may be supporting the family. Even though the home may be her property, he can invite whomever he pleases and forbid whomever he will, as he is "head of the house." Furthermore, she must vote in the place where her husband lives, although she herself may have a residence in a different city or even a different state. A native American woman loses her citizenship and her right to vote if she marriës a man of any other nationality. Discriminations.

To remove the discriminations which still indicate that women are not really people in the eyes of the law, Miss White makes the follownot really people in the eyes of the law, Miss White makes the following suggestions:

1. The passage of federal and state laws making women eligible to every civil office on the same terms and conditions as men.

2. State laws abrogating for all purposes the old common law principle that a wife's identity is merged in that of her husband.

3. A marriage law along the principles of the new Swedish law, which recognizes the fact that a wife's work in the home helps to support the family as well as the husband's work outside the home, which makes residence and other questions, such as the control of children, matters of joint decision by husband and wife, which gives husband and wife separate control over individual property, requiring both to support the family in proportion to their capacity.

Revival of Interest Shown In Stone Mountain Memorial

Memorial association through the visit here of the sculptor, Gutzon Borglum and the speech made last evening on the subject of the monument by General Leonard Wood occasioned a bright gathering at the home of the donor of that part of Stone mountain upon which the monument is to be estabished, when Samuel H. President-Elect Discusses Sea Policy of Nation With Chairman of House Naval Committee.

Marion, Ohio, January 8 .- A naval policy to keep the United tSates one of the strongest sea powers in the world until a binding disarmament agreement ean be reached was discussed at a conference here to-day between President-elect Harding and Representative Butler, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the house naval committee. Afterward it was indicated that, although a final decision must await developments, the present attitude of Senator Harding pointed to a continuation during his administration of the fleet construction program now in progress. Coupled with this program, however, would be a material curtailment in the number of civilian employees of the navy department and various economies in the land stations under navy jurisdiction.

Mr. Harding long has favored an efficient navy as the first line of American defense, and he is understood to feel that a big navy policy might be continued practically if steps are taken to curtail the strength of the army along the lines he approved yesterday in conference with Chairman Kahn, of the house military committee.

He also favors strongly the reserve system for both army and navy, and is understood to have indicated to Chairman Butler that an adequate naval reserve should be considered one of the requisites to national defense.

Hinges on Disarmanment.

The with the program association of President-elect Harding's callers today was Daniel G. Reid, New York manufacturer and financier, who talked over the general financier, who talked over the general financial situation, and gave his opinion particularly on the problem of getting money systems back to a sound basis. Mr. Reid also held to a sound basis.

Mr. Butler, who is inclined to place little faith in the proposal, expects to develop in committee hearings beginning next week, all the information available on the probable consequences of disarmament. This information he will turn over to Mr. Hading.

conferences between baseball club owners and managers who are gathering here for the three meetings next week when the major and the minor leagues will attempt to reach an agreement under which both will operate, today kept the air filled with rumors concerning action which might be taken when 'the sessions open, but the only official action was the opening of the maor league schedule committee meet-

Birmingham Club Quintet Fights Nobly, But Efforts Are in Vain; Score 41 to 26

(Special.) - Atlanta Athletic club basket ball players demonstrated to an overflowing house of local followers of the game tonight just exactly how they have won the southern championship for three onsecutive years and how they expect to cop off these honors again this season. When the final recthis season. When the final reck this season. When the final reckoning was made Atlanta was ning the game 41 to 26.

There was too much Lewis Morrison on the floor, the crack Atlanta pivot man demonstrated that he is the pivot of the team in more sense than one. For one thing he was in the middle of every play, the starting and receiving end of long series of perfect passes for field goals and the center of the defensive play which completely broke up the attack of the clubbers.
There were too many Atlanta players on the gym floor last night for the clubbers to win. Pass work by the local crew was impossible, as Atlanta men were forever and continually in the way when an attempt was made by the locals to pass the ball more than the shortest of distances.

On the other hand, Atlanta team work and passing ability was spiendid. The crack five from the Gate City completely swept the locals of their feet by their aerial attack.

Birmingham Outclassed.

Birmingham Outclassed.

Birmingham Outclassed.

Coach Hutsell's clubbers were not weaklings, however, although it must be admitted that they were outclassed. It was only after some severe scrapping on the part of the locals that Atlanta finally emerged victorious. In the first half, the Clubbers held the Atlantans to 15 points scoring eleven themselves. It was only toward the middle of the second half that Coach Bear's men began to run away with the locals and to pile up their ultimate 15 point advantage over Hutsell's men.

Morrison Led Scoring.

Morrison Led Scoring.

Eighteen of the goal attempts were successful, although of course, many more shots than that failed to result in a goal. Morrison was the highest point scorer of the night, ringing up eight field goals for 16 points. Captain Westmoreland was the next highest point-scorer for Atlanta, with 11 points.

Gill Chisholm led the club scorer with ten points. Floyd and Bryan completed the scoring of the Clubbers with four field goals were from long distance. Without detracting one bit from the glory of victory that belongs to the Atlantans, it might be said here that Floyd had about the hardest luck on his shots any player seen here this season. Although it is extremely doubtful that the ultimate result of the game would have been any different, had Floyd gotten some of the field goals that should have resulted from some of his hard luck shots the final score of the Clubbers would have been much higher than it was.

The Atlanta guards, Sullivan, Olifer than it was.

The Atlanta guards, Sullivan, Olifer and Graves, played in jam-up fashion, breaking almost every play started down the court by the Clubbers. It was only from shots a distance away from the basket that the locals could score with any degree of consistency. Clem Laughlinhouse, local guard, played a hard fighting game, while Smith, also a guard, played more of an offensive game; but just as effective, nevertheless.— Floyd, Bryan and Chisholm were offensive stars for the Clubbers, while Bass Morrison and Westmoreland played best on offensive for Atlanta.

The second mes of the three amateur leagues of Atlanta will be nlayed Tuesday night. Games will be played in the City and Wilson leagues on this day, while the games in the Girls will be played on Thursday night. The battles last week week for better than was expected. in the Girls will be played on Thursday night. The battles last week were far better than was expected and were thoroughly enjoyed by all that attended the conflicts. The encounters this week promise to be even better and fine crowds should be in attendance. The Boys' league games will be played, as before, in the Auditorium, while the girls will stage their encounters in the United Motors building.

The opening games of the season were in every way a success. Close battles were fought in each league, three being decided by the scant margin of one point and one by two points. Jack Wilson, head of the amateur organization, has been working hard and it appears that the efforts will be crowned with success.

The City league games this week

The City league games this week will bring some strong teams in action. The Agogas will meet the unintet representing the Southern Dental college. In the second game the United States Tire company will tackle the Federal prison five and this affair should be another close encounter. The final game of the evening in the City league will bring together Pack's Stars and the Grace Methodist quintet.

There are three games scheduled for the Wilson league in the Audiorium on Tuesday night. All three of these conflicts should be hard-fought affairs, even better than those of last week. In the first game of the evening Tech High will take on the basketeers of the Grant gark Athletic association. In the ext game the cagers of University High will meet the Hapeville quintet. The quintets of the Grace Methodist church and Central High will play the last game of the night. The City league games this week

Preceding the Tech-Mercer game at the Auditorium court Saturday night the Tech Freshman team took the count of the Leaders to the tune of 26 to 19. An early lead on the part of the Junior Jackets proved of an immense help to them, and though the Leaders fought sturdily throughout the second half they were unable to cut down the 14 to 3 lead established by the Tech team in the first half.

The Tech five proved quite adept at passing and got the ball in position for shots with apparent ease. Their forwards were just a bit off or goal shooting though, and a greater part of the shooting fell to, the center and to Baby-Roane, who shot three goals in the first half helped the Freshmen considerably.

Mammoth Building, With Improved Facilities, Now Occupied by Well-Known Truck Factory Branch.

The Atlanta branch of the White company is now housed by one of the largest and most complete factory sales and service branch buildings in the entire country.

Their new building is located on the let usually known as "the show ground lot," corner North Boulevard and Old Wheat'street. The general offices of the southeastern department are located here; also the sales offices for. Atlanta and vicinity. From the size of the building which has nearly 109,000 square feet of floor space it might be supposed that it was the intention of the White company to assemble its trucks here. This is not the case. The number of trucks in actual operation in this territory is so large that a building of this size is found necessary to adequately care for them. The White company was formerly located at 63-65 ivy street in a three-story brick building. In addition to the offices mentioned the service department is located in this building where several hundred thousand dollars worth of parts are housed. The shop is the largest and best equipped in the south and possibly in the entire country. It covers 15,000 some-odd feet of floor space and is equipped with new and modern machinery of all kinds.

Every comfort and convenience of the employees has been considered in designing the building. It is equipped with a modern restaurant, which is operated by and for the employees has been considered in designing the building. It is equipped with a modern restaurant, which is operated by and for the employees it is also equipped with modern shower baths, lockers and a splendid athletic field.

The growth of this company has been phenomenal. About ten years ago when trucks were first being used in Atlanta, the White company started in a very modest way. A few months thereafter. R. W. Woodruff was made manager of the concern. He is still its manager and has been since that time with the exception of the time in the service of the country as major in the motor transport corpa. The success of the White company is due to a large extent to his hibited for the first time at this year's shows.

This car is long, low and powerful. It is mounted on the standard 134-inch Duesenberg chassis, which is similar in design and construction to that of the famous Duesenberg racing cars, being fitted with a vertical all-in-line eight-cylinder engine of 2%-inch bore and 5-inch stroke.

engine of 2%-inch bore and s-inch stroke.

Its compact, small-bore engine, with an overall length of only 30 inches and a 250-inch piston displacement, combines great power with unusual economy-giving, it is claimed, more than twenty miles per gallon of gasoline.

The total weight of the Straight Eight is only about 3,000 pounds. In the rear axle alone a saving in weight of more than 100 pounds has been effected, and an addi-

the tubular front axle. Besides the tubular front axle. Besides promoting fuel economy, this elimination of superfluous unsprung weight not only prevents the road wheels from slipping and bouncing and enables the car to hold the road under any conditions, but also, with the liberal-sized cord tires used, assures the addition of hundreds of miles to the usefulness of every type.

dreds of miles to the usefulness of every type.

Tire life is stil further lengthened by the four-wheel hydraulic braking system, the Duesenberg being the first American stock car to be provided with brakes on all four wheels. The smooth, automatic action of these brakes distributes the braking strain evenly to all four wheels, preventing the wheels from locking and skidding the tires.

These features are indications of the economy and durability which are possible in the products of modern automobile engineering, based on road experience and the progress of racing car design.

New York, January 8 .- The stock arket session today opened with a moderate show of strength, some buying and short covering evidently being prompted by the encouraging observations of Governor Harding, of the federal reserve board.

Trading had not proceeded beyond the initial stage, however, before fresh weakness developed in the shipping, steeles and oils, with At-lantic Gulf, Crucible Steel and Mexican Petroleum as the chief object lean Petroleum as the chief objectives.

Declines of 2 to 6 points in these issues soon had their effect on the general list, where other popular shares forfeited 1 to 3 points. Nominal rallies ensued under cover of a sharp rise in General Asphalt and International Paper, but these were not sustained, many material losses being registered at the heavy close. News of the day which bore more being registered at the heavy close.

News of the day which bore more or less pertinently on market values included the statement that one million tons of shipping have been withdrawn from trade by the shipping board, opening of bids by the government for the sale of 56,000,000 pounds of copper and announcement that one of the largest independent steel producing companies had written off $5,000,000 in its inventory to get down to a "replacement basis."

Independents are now practically all on an even basis with the steel corporation and pricess are steady at this level. Expectations of further adustments to a lower cost basis hold up new orders and even the demand for pipe, which all along has been better than for other products, has fallen off. Copper producers have accepted business about, or slightly below, the 13-cent level, but most of the small offerings nave been either absorbed or withdrawn and a steadler tone has developed, due to ralles in London, higher foreign exchange and a better feeling in other markets. Authoritative, surveys and forecasts of the new year, including the views of Governor Harding, of the federal reserve board, sounded an optimistic note in the main, but these were tempered by allusions to the labor market, wage reductions and further curtallment of various industrial enterprises.

Bankers urged the need of economy and thrift, but disagreed with those observers who predicted a decade of downward commodity prices, indefinite suspension of dividends and more serious disturbance to domestic commerce and related branches of manufacture. Foreign trade conditions, it is conceded are becoming increasingly complex and hazardous by reason of the delay in stabilizing international remittances. Recent bank fallures in England. Spain, the Scandinavian countries and Mexico are believed to have resulted mainly from these onerous conditions.

Leading financial interests here now have under advisement an unusual number of foreign undertakings and their consummation would automatically relieve the prolonged strain on international credits. New York, January 8.—Trade has improved in finished cotton goods following very substantial reductions made last week and this week. Staple ginghams and 32-inch chambrays have been bought freely and one line of ginghams has been placed at value. Percales and prints, now sold without stock protection have also been bought very freely from the largest producers. More business has come forward on wide sheetnigs. The demand for colored cottons, such as cheviots, plaids, express stripes and tickings, is broadening out, and in a few days a complete revision is looked for in the prices of indigo denims. Wash goods, quilts, and white guantities and a significant feature is that many of the large jobbers are requesting express shipments of carload lots. The volume of new husiness booked has been sufficient thus far to warrant the restarting in full of such large plants as the American Printing company, the Amoskeas company, and some others that have been operating or print cloths have been steady. REVISION IN PRICES OF OVERALLS IS MADE

New York, January 8.—Overall denim prices were revised today by one of the largest manufacturers to a basis of 17 cents for 2.20 indigos. The top price in the open markets last year in second-hand trading was 55 cents and the highest price named by agents was 44 cents.

est price named by agents was secents.

The new prices will mean that wholesalers of overalls will be able to sell on a basis permitting retailing at $1.50 instead of $4.50 and upwards. The new price is more than 50 per cent below the government price fixed at the inception of the war and probably is lower than most mills can meet.

a further sharp advance in the cotton market today which local brokers attributed to growing optimism over "eneral business prospects and a broadening investment or commission house demand. There was some irregularity early, with enough week-end realizing and southern hedge selling to cause moderate reactions, but the offerings were soon absorbed and the best prices were touched in the late trading, with March selling at 15.65, or 45 points above the closing quotations of Friday, and approximately 2½ cents per pound above the low record of last week. That delivery closed at 15.47 and the general market closed very steady at a net advance of 27 to 40 points. There were several features in the early news which were regarded as contributing to increased confidence in the trade outlook. The statements of Governor Harding, of the federal reserve board, with reference to the financial situation and industrial outlook evidently attracted a "cood deal of attention, while there also was bullish comment on reports that the new southern Edge law corporation organized at New Orleans recently was to open for actual business on Monday. Other features mentioned on the advance were the increased sales of print cloths, reported at Fall River for the week, further reports of increasing domestic mill activity and the possibility that easing money market conditions might foreshadow a reduction in rediscount rates. After opening steady at an advance of 4 to 10 points active months sold about 4 to 8 points net lower under profitaking and southern selling, but soon firmed up, with (January advancing to 16.65 and May to 15.63 late in the morning. Closing prices were a few points points off from the best under realizing. Trade interests were credited with buying moderately on the advance, while there was covering by recent sellers for a reaction and a good deal of buying Established 1873

Wheat developed a strong undertone and advanced sharply after a weak start, due to persistent buying to remove hedges against export sales. The British commission was not in the market, but the continent was a bood buyer, and sales of 750,000 bushels were reported to Germany and Italy. A small cargo was reported sold late yesterday to Scandinavia, and Greece and Spain were in the market for wheat, but no sales were reported. Sentiment was a little more friendly to the buying side as a result of the export business.

Coarse grains were slightly easier early, but railled with wheat. Tradewas light and mostly of a local character. Minneapolis reported 25,000 bushels of corn sold to Baltimore, the first business from that market so far. Some hedging pressure was in evidence.

Oats were dull practically all day, while provisions averaged higher on scattered buying and light offerings. the advance, while there was cov-ering by recent sellers for a reac-tion and a good deal of buying through Wall street houses. SPOTS IN NEW YORK.

This Feed Makes Heavy Pullers

You should not expect your teams to pull heavy loads in winter time unless you feed them a ration which gives them 100% energy and pep. The best feed for this purpose is Old Beck Sweet Feed.

You cannot afford to feed a ration of doubtful quality. Feeds of high quality have declined in price more than any other manufactured article.

There is just as much reason for you to insist on quality feed today as there was when feeds were selling at sixty to seventy dollars per ton a few months ago.

Old Beck Sweet Feed is made of sound cracked corn, crimped whole oats, green alfalfa meal, and cane molasses-properly proportioned and thoroughly mixed. It is all feed.

You cannot buy corn and oats even at present prices and make as good a feed or at as low a price as Old Beck Sweet Feed. This famous horse and mule ration gives you the most feed per dollar.

We also manufacture Happy Cow Feed, Happy Hog Feed and Happy Poultry Feeds. All are of the highest quality and they are sold at prices you can well afford to pay. The results they produce are proof of their e

"Mental Sunshine Statistics About Our Nation"

The actual figures help to dig out the truth. America is the star nation of the globe. Here are inspiring statistics that are going to give the pessimists a good, swift punch right on the jaw:

Our national wealth has increased from seven billions at the time of the civil war to something over two hundred and twenty-five billions at the present time.

The nearest nation that compares with us in wealth is England, with about eighty billions.

This country produces in manufactured and agricultural products in a single year more than the national wealth of France. Of the total earth's production we are contributing 25 per cent of the agricultural products, 40 per cent of the mineral production and 34 per cent of the manufactured goods, and we are accomplishing these results with but 5 per cent of the earth's population. From a debtor nation at the beginning of the war, the United States has become the chief creditor nation of the world. If we go to smash with such a situation, we ourselves, and only ourselves, will Georgia Official Appears Before House Agricultural Committee.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON.

Washington, January 8.—(Special.)
L. B. Jackson, director of the Georgia State Bureau of Markets, appeared today before the house agricultural committee, which has underconsideration several bills relating to trading in futures, and made the following statement:

"Representing the Georgia department of agriculture. I state that speculative short selling on the exchanges is a curse to agriculture.

"By speculative short, selling. I mean the act of a speculator selling. I mean the act of a speculator selling a commodity on the board that he does not own nor possess, and which does not exist. It is a natural act for one to buy that which they do not have, but it is an unnatural act for one to sell that which they do not possess. It is unfair to permit the real owner of a produce to have to compete in selling with a group of men who do not own nor produce. I urge legislation that prohibits speculative short selling.

"This legislation should compel the seller of a future contract to file with the exchange handling the trade an affidavit showing that the seller is the owner of the commodity sold, and also showing where it is stored. There should be a miff penalty for false swearing and the agents of the secretary of agriculture should verify the affidavits by inspection of the books of the seller.

"The foregoing suggestion is not a theory. It is already a proven successful remedy. During the war a speculative bear raid was made on cotton, and the chief of the federal bureau of markets, Mr. Charles J. Brands, who was also chairman of the cotton committee of the war raid was stopped. This was done under authority of a war measure. The records of the federal bureau of markets will show that the remedy was successful, and that the legitimate hedging on the exchange was not impaired.

"The exchange will tell you that if you prohibit speculative short selling you cut down their business to where it will not be profitable for them to operate, and that they will close, and if they do so much the bett

Potato prices are nearly back to the season's lowest points, according to this authority, reaching $1.25 per per 100 pounds in the Chicago carload lot market. Other city markets range from $1.50 to $2.10. The gain in cabbage prices range from $20 to $30 a ton and probably is the outcome of seasonal conditions, it is said.

The apple market is described as dull and weak with city market prices ranging from $4 to $5 a barrel for best grades of the standard kind. Weekly Statement

Washington, January 8.— (Special.)—Senator Harris has taken up with the injerstate commerce commission the matter of prejudicial rates on cotton to and from points in Georgia.

Writing to Senator Harris, Secretary George B. McGinty, in behalf of the commission, says:

"Both producers and dealers in many commedities, including cotton, have requested the commission for reductions in rates because of recent reductions in the price level. However, up to the present time, the commission has not thought that it can consistently, having in mind the terms of the transportation act, make material reductions in rates for transportation in rates for transportation in samuch as even under the increased rates as recently established carriers as a whole are not yet obtaining earnings equal to the percentage upon their fair investment determined by congress in the transportation act to be reasonable.

"It is evident that if a change in the basis of increasing the rates on cotton from Georgia be made by this commission similar changes will have to be made from all oth-

Electoral College Interesting Information To Meet On Monday In State Capitals

Jackson, Miss., January 8.—A motion to dissolve the temporary injunction granted by Chancellor V. J. Stricker to restrain the fire insurance companies operating in the state from conspiring to withdraw and cancelling their existing policies, was argued before the chancellor this afternoon.

Following the arguments of attorneys sepresenting the fire insurance companies and the state revenue agents, the chancellor announced that he would take the matter under advisement and would probably be ready to announce his decision in a short time.

Arguments for the insurance companies were made by H. H. Watkins and J. B. Harris, of this city, while Chalmers Potter, Judge Clayton Potter, of Jackson, and J. W. Cassidy, of Brookhaven, Miss., represented the state revenue agent.

Late this afternoon the state revenue agent filed an amendment to his original declaration, in which be charged the insurance companies with a conspiracy to withdraw wrom the state and disconfiture furnishing fire protection to Missisappipolicy holders. The amendment is said to be based upon a conference held in New York with members of the board of fire underwriters before the decision to withdraw was announced.

Georgia Sheriff EMBASSY DENIES Goes To Canada For Wanted Man

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON. Washington, January 8.—(Special.)—Sheriff R. L. Milton, of Ellijay, Gilmer county, Georgia, is in Washington handling the matter of extradition papers with the state department to arrest J. H. Charles, now being held in Lethridge, Alber ta, Canada.

Charles was convicted in June 1918, of the killing of Howard Roberts in Gilmer county and was sentenced to ten years in the state penitentiary. He escaped and was penitentiary. He escaped and was captured in Wyoming in December, Sheriff Milton bringing him back to Georgia. Charles escaped the second time from the state farm at Milledgeville on October 16, 1919, and was arrested in Canada last month on a charge of vagrancy. Investigation by the Canadian police authorities developed the past record of Charles and finally the Georgia authorities were consulted. He is now benig held until Sheriff Miltoff can reach Canada with the proper papers.

Senator Harris today requested the weather bureau of the department of agriculture to investigate the advisability of increasing the weather station at Thomasville, Ga., to a forecast station. The nearest forecast station is several hundred miles, and because of the large agricultural interests in that section Senator Harris has taken the matter up at the request of local parties.

The senate late this afternoon decided to accept the idea proposed by Senator Harris, of Georgia, that farmers be given the preference in purchases from the output of the Muscle Shoals plant if the plant is completed. The senate has under consideration the Wadsworth bill providing for the creation of a government corporation to manufacture nitrates. The Harris amendment was introduced several days ago, as told in these dispatches. Later Senator Smith, of South Carolins, proposed a further amendment, which carried the Harris idea. It is believed that the senate will adopt the proposal.

GRIFFIN HI QUINTET IN BRAMLETT CASE BUMPS BARNESVILLE

Griffin, Ga., January 8.—(Special.)
In a fast and snappy game of basketball before the best crowd that has yet witnessed a local game this season, the fast Griffin Athletic club quintet defeated the Gordon Institute team, of Barnesville, Thursday night by the score of 48 to 37. It was in every respect one of the cleanest and hand fought games ever seen in the old armory. The score at the end of the first half was 17 to 20 with the home boys leading by a meager 3-point margin.

Among the outstanding stars for Griffin were Forest Cumming, Wallace and Wyrick, Cumming's excellent shooting of field goals was the feature of the game, at least three of these shots being a distance of fully half the floor.

For the visitors, Cox was the outstanding star. This is one of the fastest and surest forwards seen on the local court in many moons, and the Griffin defense found him hard to stop. With another season of playing he should develop into one of the best prep players in southern circles.

The game was refereed by Robert Cumming; timer, Dr. Wilson; scorers, Hea and Davis.

"Nothing Is Impossible," Motto of Thomas H. Ince

"Nothing is impossible," is a motto they have in the world of the movies. If the average individual had to overcome in a year the obstacles which confront a motion picture producer in one week—well, he'd just naturally throw up his hands in despair. That is, of course, if he is just the average individual. If he has in him something of the caliber of the men who have won front place in the motion picture ranks, he will buckle on his armor and "up and at 'em." For, being a picture producer, he knows that "nothing is

When you see it on the screen it all seems to run so smooth and easy that you have no idea of the cunning devices employed, the strategy used and the almost supervices employed, the strategy used and the almost superhuman feats performed in order to place that beautifully gliding strip of film before your eyes.

Take one single picture like Thomas H. Ince's "Lying Lips" an Associated Producers' Special production, which, according to observation, is the biggest thing Ince has done since "Civilization." Before he got through with that picture the big producer had to take a look more than once at the little silver-framed motto hung over his desk: "Nothing Is Impossible!" He looked at it pretty closely when he was informed by the high moguls of the city of Los Angeles that he simply couldn't stage a big electrical and tainstorm in Griffith park, because the high voltage he demanded for his lightning would use up all the electrical juice and put the homes of the city in semi-darkness. He started at it frowningly when his engineers neatly spiked his idea of

The elevated is the appropriate vehicle, and as you rattle along between endless narrow lines of tenement access, you are getting together some atmosphere that will help to make you appreciate the vision and the greatheartedness of the Lewisohn sisters who built the neighborhood playhouse, a beacon light in the "squalor." And tragedy of Grand street, which is the refuge of the Russian Jewish immigrant arriving in America.

My guide arranged it that we should leave the "L" several blocks before our real destination was arrived at, so that we might stroll through Grand street and get its ligits and shadows as we went. And the lights are not as overshadowed as one might think. For withal the poverty and close-bargaining and ill health on every side, there is love and faith and much of simple happiness here among peddlers, and myriads of childen, and brighteyed youth, and even old age, which among these people has a realest and a deference that is good to see in these days when authority has so little standing.

And there is genius too. It has all heen well painted in "Humoresque," and the neighborhood playhouse provides proof positive that Humoresque could have been founded many times in fact.

While we ate an American dinher (praise be) my guide explained that the Jewish people of Grand

Then the playhouse has been dereloped some of the most marked genius that has enriched the Amercan stage, dramatic and musical.

Tony Sarg is an Italian of genue, a cartoonists, a poet, a philospher, an idealist. He dabbles in many things and brilliantly, but there is surely no achievement more inique than his transplanting of the Marionettes (what we would call Punch and Judy show) from Italy, where it is the joy of the villagers, to the American metropolis; but in such glorified form that the New York "villagers" Infinitely more sophisticated, rejoice as artiessly not this triumph of pantomine as the n this triumph of pantomine as the easants in Italy rejoice in the orig-

"While efforts failed—to secure the acceptance of the equity contract prepared by the out-of-town managers—providing, among other things, for a clause that the wholesale manager who most cancel a concert shall reimburse any local manager for legitimate moneys disbursed—it was felt that the National association is gaining in strength and in the adoption of plans likely to help the entire business of buying and selling of prefessional services of musicians.

out in the Pacific ocean.

But he got his knock-out thunderstorm and his wreck and about a dozen other things difficult of accomplishment besides. As one of the studio associates remarked, admiringly: "Tom just stepped on 'er in this picture."

To begin with, the greyhounds which are used in the English coursing meet featured in one of the first scenes of "Lying Lips"—Ince was told they would have to change the details and use beagles or fox hounds, because there wasn't a pack of English greyhounds within five nundred miles of Los Angeles. "Burn up the wires," ordered Ince. "Get me those hounds!"

The wires hummed east, west,

"Get me those hounds!"

The wires hummed east, west, north and south. Soon a bunch of valuable hounds, insured for as much as $10,000 apiece, were located. At a big cost they were sent to Los Angeles along with some genuine English hares. The coursing meet was staged, hounds in full cry, red breeches and all just as it would be done in England.

Constructed Wreek.

Of terrible and tremendous importance was the shipwreck scene in which Blair Cornwall and Nancy Abbott are cast adrift on half of a ship, the other half having been blown to atoms when the boat struck a random mine. Ince gave orders to build an exact duplicate of half of a wrecked ocean liner, float her out into the rough waters of the Pacific and take the scenes thereon.

A crew of sixty men, working two shifts night and day, started building the wreck in San Pedro harbor. It was built in accordance with plans exactly duplicating a real ocean liner. It took three weeks to build it and it cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. All in all it will take just about two hundred seconds to sohw it on the screen!

When all was ready tugs started creen! When all was ready tugs started when all was ready tugs started to tow the precarious structure out into the Pacific. "I want to get the real motion of the waves," said Ince. "Keep going till you get it." They got it all right—out about thirty miles from shore. They turned the lonesome old thing adrift and the graveren waves swooned. They got it all right—out about thirty miles from shore. They turned the lonesome old thing adrift and the gray-green waves swooped down upon it and lifted it up and slapped against its sides and showered foam upon it and also upon the carpenters and members of the crew who "staid with her," all swathed in life belts. Night came on and the old wreck creaked and groaned and her seams began to part. Carpenters came and it was nail, nail, sils, strap, strap and rope, rope. Would she hold together until they could make the picture?

Never before had such lengths been resorted to in motion pictures to attain the "real thing." Two tug boats hired at a cost of twelve and a half an hour stood by night and day. It took them a week and a half, to make the wreck scenes and though she groaned she held. Each morning boatloads of shivering cameramen and House Peters and Florence Vidor, the co-stars, were lifted over the sides of the wreck and the vivid scenes were shot.

Then came the momentous night when the wreck was to be blown up. Did Thomas H. Ince get his United States battleship to come to the rescue just in the nick of time? He did. He steamed out to the flagship of Admiral Hugh Rodman, commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet, and he chartered the Minneapolis, one of the crack boats of the fleet, How he did it nobody knows, but Ince "has a way with him," and it may be the admiral thought it would be good recruiting propaganda. Anyway Ince soon had the 500 jackies jumping at his bidding while the cameras ground ceaselessly.

For Ince had hauled out the old sweater which he used to wear when he was directing for the old Triangle and Domino and had personally taken the megaphone in "Lying Lips." The old sweater had been in moth balls for some time, but once she comes out—youd better watch, for it's going to be some

For his Atlanta recital, Mr. Zimbalist has chosen several master works of the great composers, besides groups of lighter numbers. The program will open with the big Mozart concerto in A major, in four movements. It will include the Tschalkowsky-Liszt, "Romancey in G," and the same composers' "andante cantabile;" the Haydn-Auer "vivace;" Sarasate's "Jotta Navarre," and the famous fantasis from "Carmen," besides other numbers. It is probable that the violinist will give several encores, too.

Blocks of seats have been reserved by teachers and students in several colleges, and seats also have been taken by hundreds of out-of-town music lovers. The mail orders received by the Evans-Salter Musical bureau reveal a great deal of interest among out-of-town folk. Musicians are especially interested in the Zimbalist recital because he is recognized as one of the most scholarly of violinists and a model for students.

Zimbalist is by no means one of the "Russian importations" of the after-the-war period. He was born in Russia, educated under the great Leopold Auer, and a European success when but a boy. But he came to America nearly ten years ago, won success from the very first, and has lived in this country since then. Some idea of Zimbalist's popularity where he is best known may be gained from the fact that he gave twelve recitals in New York city last year and is booked for twelve more this season.

Seats for the Zimbalist recital are to be had at the store of the Cable Piano company, at grices ranging from $1 to $2.

But was T homas H. Ince content? Not he. He was like the little boy with the drum. He just had to experiment until he had extracted the last ounce of thrills and excitement from the pet wreck of his. So about a week later the derelict was really blown up with a heavy charge of dynamite which sent the flying fish of the Pacific skee-daddling for safer waters. Now Ince is in a quandary which film to show—the one which is "real" or the one which shows the most striking effect.

Managing a crowd of 500 extras was only one little item connected with the shipwreck. A passenger boat, "The Governor," was chartered for the occasion and men, women and children were lowered over the side in lifeboats, which tipped dangerously, causing several women to faint in real earnest. This, of course, is to show the early scenes on the wrecked ship when she is just about to sink. It took nineteen assistants to handle the mab of extras. To show the scenes of excitement in the interior of the ship after it had been torpedoed an exact duplicate of the main dining room of an ocean liner was built on one of the Ince stages. Dining here in comfortable splendor, men and women in evening dress are suddenly thrown into panic when tons of water began pouring in at the portholes engulfing impartially shimmering satin and patent leather pumps. Huge tanks outside the set containing 10,000 gallons of water each shot the water into the portholes along wooden troughs. At the same time hidden wires swayed the gay festoon in the dining room sharply to one side. This, Mme. Emma Calve is threatening another concert tour of the United States. For the sake of America's happy memories it is to be hoped that she will be too discreet for any such undertaking.

The tall part of the equation is fairly easy, being a matter of heritage. But the slender and willowy parts—well, unless you have tried them yourself you cannot remotely appreciate their difficulties:

"I stand six feet minus my French heels," admitted Miss Howland. "My weight is 158 pounds, which is fair enough considering the length over which it extends. Seriousness may be a singular word, in fact, to use for a theater; but most of our theaters are so blantantly festive that they are hard to reconcile with the dignity of the role they are called on to play when performances or events which have a civic character take place within with the Odeon in Paris, the ornament of a whole section of the Cincinnati Symphony to Give Two Concerts in Atlanta Under Auspices of Study Club.

The annual visit of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra will be made to Atlanta on Friday, January 28, when the magnificent body of musicians will give two concerts under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Study club. There will be a special matinee for children in the afternoon, and then a concert for grown people, which will be the fourth of the civic concert series of the club.

The orchestra is again under the leadership of Eugene Ysaye, who has come to be regarded as a conductor of the very first rank, in addition to his honors as a violinist. On his last appearance here a year ago, he was said to have conducted one of the finest concerts of his career.

"Have you ever been forced to adopt desperate measures?" I inquired, feeling certain the answer would be a clean negative. The clever comedienne of the brilliant Belasco success is so like those lithesome creatures of the fashion pages, so vivacious and quick of wit and restive, that one could never picture her in terms of avoirdupois.

My question seemed to amuse her. She ran her long, nervous fingers through her taway crown of hair, crinkled the corners of her frank blue eyes into a map of mirth and appealed to her friend, Miss Zoe Akin, the playlady, who was pouring the tea.

"Shall I tell?" she asked.

"Confess," advised the playlady." I once weighed B90 pounds." There was almost a shudder in the sentence. It was easy to read these were fearsome words even in memory.

with matinee Saturday.

Several plays have appeared to be bigger successes, have come and gone since it was first produced, but its popularity continues to increase instead of diminish. Its phenomenal run is undoubtedly largely due to the spell cast by the weird and beautiful Hawaiian music, which never seems to lose its haunting spell. It creates the atmosphere of the play and becomes a sort of appropriate musical commentary on the pathetic story of love and sacrifice that the drama tells.

It is rather worthy of note that Mr. Tully, the producer has particularly been successful in finding new Luanas. This season he announces Miss Ann Reader, a beautiful and talented actress who gives promise of becoming as famous as her predecessors. Miss Reader, whose picture appears above, is said to be ideal in the part, possessing all the characteristics of the little Hawaiian Princess; William Maccauley, one of the drama's most popular leading men, has the role of Paul Wilson, the American physician. Frederick Forrester, remembered for his wonderful portrayal of the beach-comber is also a member of this exceptionally strong company. Mr. Tully has kept the company intact as much as possible, each member being a type of the character he or she portrays.

I cannot but recall that Louis XIV. danced in his own theater; Bernini and Salvator Rosa put all the arts at once in their personal conduct of theirs. What grave old names these seem! But there is an honorable group of such worthles, doubtless looking down on your opening—Goldono, Farinelli, Mozart; Mile. Carmago, Moliere—I bid you back to a home that would have delighted you.

Glameur. A new book by W. B. Maxwell that pictures the manner in which grown men create a glamour for themselves out of their longing for something better than the common order of things.

Mr. Maxwell is well remembered as the author of "The Devil's Garden" and "The Ragged Messenger," an original and vivid treatment of a strongly interesting theme—it shows a strong contrast between wealth and poverty as it affects the social medium in which the Christian message of today must be delivered. "The Mirror and the Lamp' is a story in which the clash of ideals will absorb the reader's attention. "Life Can Never Be the Same," a collection of short war stories of which it can be said that every page is full of interest. THE HEART OF FRANCE.

The Heart of France. By Andre Hallays. The translation is by Frank Roy Fraprie. This is one of the handsomest volumes of the season and it is attractively illustrated with forty duogravures and four plates in full color.

The author who wrote "The Spell of Alsace" needs no introduction to literary readers, for this volume was published just at the close of the great war when the U. S. A. was eager and thirsty to read something, in fact, everything about the countries over there, especially France.

He does not pose as a writer of travels, but takes his interested readers to see the picturesque and beautiful little out-of-the-way places that are not on the well-worn paths of the every-day tourists.

It is with the eye of an artist and the soul of a poet that he has in his wanderings located the "heart of France." The wonderful architecture seen in the different places in this beautiful country that he has explored has impressed him hy the really marvelous styles of French architecture. We are seeing this beautiful scenery of country and churches and chateaux through the author's true vision which we would have missed without his artistic eye and guiding hand.

Hallays is an artist, an author and a reader who knows his French literature, and he has resurrected many characters who are worthy of remembrance that perhaps would have remained in forgetfulness.

What a pleasure it will be to read his description of Soissons, the beauty of which is increased by the lovely picture of the France before the war will now have but a memory, but memories cannot be obliterated. (The Page company, Boston.)

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD. The Yale University Press wishes its readers a happy New Year!

Zane Grey, whose new novel; "The Mysterious Rider," is to be published this month, is still on the Pacific coast. Some time during the latter part of this month he will probably start for New York.

Don Byrne, whose latest novel, "The Foolish Matrons," has been notified of the sale of the moving picture rights in the story at a wonderful price. Maurice Tourneur is to make the film version. The novel has already been sent to press for a third printing.

W. L. George, whose novel "Caliban" is one of the most widely discussed of the recent books of fiction is again in New York, having returned in December from the west. He expects to go to England this month. In speaking of his "American Impressions," he says the real America is the middle west.

Edith Wharton's novel, "The Age of Innocence," pictures a certain period in New York society life with unsurpassed skill is generally recognized. It is being discussed heat it is in all cities possessing a "four hundred." Annie Fellowes Johnston says of the book: "I have just finished reading aloud "The Age of Innocence." It was a delight because the little town in which I was reared contained nearly every one of her characters. It was such an interesting condition of the times of my own girlhood that I thoroughly enjoyed it, and also the artistic work of the author evoked my warmest admiration."

John Galsworthy's new novel, "It Chancery," headed the list of fic-tion in many of the eastern libra-ries. It is powerful and interest-ing.

I had always believed that Dr. Swift's account of Gulliver's trave's into the land of the Lilliputians, and the country of Brobdingnag, where the neople were giants, to whom Gulliver was a mere pigmy by comparison, and the suckling babes were more ponderous than the biggest ordinary-sized human being, were the results of the wildest sort of imaginative fancy, but for a moment after I entered that setting. Four Other Vaudeville Acts and Feature Film Drama on the Bill.

Bily Hart and Circus Girls, as sprightly and spectacular a combination of feminine beauty and unique stunts as any vaudeville patron could desire, is announced as the headline turn on the bill of entertainment booked at Loew's comics, scenics and other short of entertainment booked at Loew's for both shows of the week.

Other stellar attractions for the opening show are Frank Willing and Dolly Jordan in an exclusive offering of songs and piano number called "A Few Pleasant Moments." Floyd Mack and Maybelle, who present their mirthful originality. "Her voice." E. J. Moore, "The Gabby Tricketer," a burlesque magicfan, and the Marvelous DeOnzon, a troupe of sensational symmasts, impers and eguilibrists.

A notable film feature will appear on the supernatural, "The Star of the supernatural, "The Star Rover," produced as a Loew-Metro special, with a distinguished allsprightly and spectacular a combi-

Billy Hart and his Circus Girls includes in its personnel such well-known artists as the De Forest Sisters, Betty Dennison and Helen Murphy, to say nothing of the principal entertainer who stages the act. This offering is marked by the comeliness of the feminine performers and the varied whirl of melody, fun and novelty stutus introduced. An all-star program has been ar-

An all-star program has been aranged for the week-end. Prominent among the five acts scheduled are Al Burton and Mary Shea, in their "Revue of 1921." and Hodge and Lowell, who bring their sparkling skit. "Object. Matrimony." The screen attraction for Thursday, Friday and Saturday is "The Point of View," a society romance of the present day, starring beautiful Elaine Hammerstein. THE HAUNTED VIOLIN HEADLINER AT LYRIC Entertaining Act Presents Violin That Plays at Will of Master.

The newest sensation of the amusement world, "The Haunted Violin," described as "the mysterious discovery of the century," shares headline honors on the bila of big-time Keith vaudeville at the Lyric the first half of this week Four, programed as those "Homerun Hitters of Melody and Mirth. Three other sterling acts make up an exceptionally good program, while the last half of the week will have sush features as Mile Rhea, "The Sweetheart of the Dance" is a gorgeous offering; "Kimberly-Page & Co.," in a pretentious novelty, and other features:

"The Haunted Violin" is to be presented by C. E. Edmonds, known as "The Melodic Phenomenon." The violin apparently plays as the will of its master. No hand is seen to touch it; no bow to come in contact with the strings. To say the least the act is baffling and entertaining. Mr. Edmonds has just returned from a tour of Europe and "The Haunted Violin" is being presented here for the first time.

The Monarch Comedy Four already is well known to vaudeville lovers as one of the best and most popular of all male singing quartets. Each man is a soloist of ability and the act is spiced with just the right amount of comedy. Their repertoire is filled with the kind of tuneful songs everyone likes to hear.

repertoire is filled with the kind of tuneful songs everyone likes to hear.

Dippy Diers, the inmitable pantomimist, is a clown who has clowned all ever the world and who is certain to receive a welcome at the Lyric. He is spiendidly assisted by Fle Bennett, a pretty, young woman, who is a capable singer and dancer.

Saxton and Ferrell, who will appear in "Lights," are comedians of the first water—singers and dancers of the out-of-the-ordinary type, who are certain of an enthusiastic welcome. Roland Travers is the kind of an illusionist who makes one say "I can't really believe my own eyes!" He has one of the finest bagsful of tricks ever turned loose in Atlanta. Added to the extraordinarily fine vaudaville will be the latest Pathe Review, with its slow motion picture; Topics of the Day and Pathe News also.

Jazz for Ora Carew.

In "What's the Matter With Marriage?" Ora Carew, the star, assisted by several of the members of the all-star cast, stages some original dances which are expected to be a sensation, Miss Carew's director, Philip E. Rosen, is known as "the Jazz king of the films" because he always has present on his sets a real jazz orchestra to furnish tantalizing airs for the benefit of his players. It is to the music of this orchestra that Miss Carew will "step." Hence the sensation prediction.

As London's millions of admirers of the supernatural—a strange, absorbing narrative of the journeys of a tortured soul through the unseen.

Nothing that the great realist ever that comes to Atlanta in picture form. The Grand's feature is a

Bessie Barriscale is still at leisure. She is considering two propositions—a starring contract with a big film company and an offer to appear in a stage play.

"To Please One Woman," Story of Havoc Wrought by Woman.

Those who remember Lois Weber's wonderful productions, such "Where Are My Children?" es," "The Price of a Good "Shoes," "The Price of a Good Fime" and "Borrowed Clothes," will doubtless be interested in learning that her latest big Paramount production, "To Please One Woman," will be the feature attraction at the Riaito all this week.

The picture is based on the fact that most of the great events of history were brought about because a man tried to please one woman, Adam ate the apple, the Trojan war was fought, and Anthony lost an empire—for a woman. And so in-this gripping modern story Lois Weber has crystallized the destructive force of the ages—has presented with mighty dramatic intensity the havoc wrought by a selfish woman.

sented with mighty dramatic intensity the havoc wrought by a selfish woman.

It is a story of real life in a real town—of real people who love and suffer and at last find happiness. A story that reflects every aspect of modern American life, and lays bare the wiles of women.

In this production, Miss Weber has faithfully pictured the most destructive force in the world, a beautiful, brilliant woman, filled with ambition, yet selfish and ever chasing new pleasures, thirsting for row thrills, winning new hearts and leaving behind her ruin.

Upon this foundation is based the plot of "To Please One Woman," and throughout the entire narrative, one is filled with the wonder of the diay, the keen insight into the lives of others that enabled this famous woman to gaze deep down into the hidden depths of an ambitious woman's soul, and lay bare the things that lure men to the very depths. As the star in this picture. Miss Weber has chosen Claire Windsor, a new comer upon the screne, but one whose future is bright, indeed, she is called the "Lois Weber find," and is one of the most beautiful women before the camera. Her work in this picture has excited the admiration of every critic who has been accorded a studio showing of the production, and she may be expected to play the leading the present year.

What Pictures Mean.

It was not so very long ago that a few hopefuls, with meager funds and scant equipment, began the filming of "story pictures" in Los Angeles. Studios were converted bungalows and the sets were mostly the great out-doors. From that inauspicious but determined start has grown Los Angeles' biggest industry, and almost overnight by the way the world judges time. Just what the motion picture industry means to Los Angeles financially—aside from the world-wide advertising given the city—is strikingly shown by figures compiled by the chamber of commerce. Fift, milion dollars annually are distributed in Los Angeles and the immediate vicinity by the film companies. Of this sizeable amount $30.000.00 for materials and supplies. The film output of the Los Angeles studios is estimated to have a yearly value of $150.090.000—the most magnificent product of all this city's industries. The far-heralded shipbuilding yards turn out $60.000.000 in boats yearly to travel the seven seas of the world, being the nearest approach to the picture industry in value of production. The chamber of commerce figures reveal that, like the army, it requires seven men to support the man in action. In other ALWAYS A GOODSHOW

Sympathetic Roles.

Playing the sympathetic roles is the quickest way to win the way to the heart of the audience! This, at least, is the opinion of Charles Ogle. Paramount character actor. "Long experience has taught me," says Mr. Ogle, "that any audience will respond quickly to the kind, gendermanly, congenial roles. It is human nature and the response is certain. I have been asked many times what type of portrayal I liked best and in each instance I have admitted that the sympathetic role, is what I love to play. The reason for this is that it is easy for me to really feel these parts, to enter into the spirit of the role."

This, is undoubtedly one of Miss Bennett's best screen productions and those who see it will remember it as one of the finest pictures of the year.

Editor Constitution: The statement enclosed outlines a program agricultural, live stock and marketing development work which we may be properly accepted as a basis on which to predicate our activities in 1921. We believe it a safe and sane program which be put over with the facilities at the farmers' command, and without larger expenditures than they should be able to make at this time.

This is an auspicious beginning and represents a foretaste of the great benefits which may be expected to accrue to the farmers of Georgia when the farm bureau harmonic symbilized on a state-wide

QF THE CROPS.

The average farm needs to grow 97.7 bushels of corn more than was raised in 1918, 1919 or 1920. There is a market within the state for 100,271,00 bushels of the state for 100,271,00 bushels.of corn. South Georgia farmers may have a surplus, but many in north Georgia will need it. To obtain the increased yield either the acreage to this crop will have to be enlarged, or the average yield raised from 14.2 bushels per acre, as it was in 1920 to 20.8 bushels per acre in 1921. We must intensity cultivation to that end.

Velvet Beans-We need and can use 750,000 tons of velvet beans in the state. It would add much to the state. It would add much to the fertility of the land and pro-vide the hogs and cattle of the state with much essential feed if velvet beans were planted in every acre of corn on which this crop will mature. To meet the require-ments the average farmer must plant and harvest 1.5 tons more velvet beans in 1921 than in 1920.

gia not adapted to growing wheat out in sections where it grows well isfactory home market should be easily found for these products. It is true, however, that one section of the state will need to be in Onts-The average farm can afford to grow 20.7 bushels more oats put it in early. Oats grown in the winter season prevent soil erosion, leave the land in ideal condition for the hay crop which should follow, and supply more nutrients per acre than the present corn crop, average yields considered. The more idle land we utilize for growing oats, the larger percentage of the corn crop we can set free for the maintenance and finishing of more hogs.

Hay-The state needs 275,000 tons more hay than was harvested within the state, and the organization will be extended into all counties that have a county agent by the first of March this year. This is the part of the program upon which the farm buréau members should concentrate their energies.

Much has been said about marketing that is relevant, but the producer and consumer is adequate and economical distribution. This is the problem the farm bureau is attacking.

The county agents, for instance, working in conperation with the land as well as to furnish the hay needed every acre to oats and wheat should be followed with cowpeas, the producer and consumer is adequate and economical distribution. The county agents, for instance, working in conperation with the system of the supply of bay for feeding cattle.

Sweet Potatoes supplemental cash crops for the state is sweet potatoes. The market was harvested in 1920 before we have a sufficient quantity for home needs. This is a crop that does fairly well in either a wet or dry year. More care must be exercised in harvesting, storing and curing. It is safe to say that of the 13,764,000 bushels grown last year, more than a fourth will rot this winter. Why not build a community storage house during the summer and make plans immediately for the proper marketing and distribuhe proper marketing and distribu-tion of the crop?

Peanuts-For commercial purposes the area to this crop may be spread over all the light soils of the state. If the price offered for crushing is not satisfactory, an excellent crop for grazing down with hogs has been provided. Tests conducted at the Moultrie Packing plant have shown that a proper combination of corn, peanut meal and sweet pota-toes produce first quality meat at middle and north Georgia the same south Georgia. This is a most ex-

Sugar Cane and Sorghum-Acreed in the sections adapted to their farm is complete without a good home orchard. It will aid in reduc-ing living expenses, minimizing the doctor's bill and will add at least $100 to the farm income annually if properly cared for.

Home Garden-There should be ood garden on every farm. Health and economy make it essential.

Poultry-A flock of 50 hens can be maintained on the waste about the average farm. They will provide the family with a most desirable food supply and may be made to increase the farm income by at least $150 per year. The output of poultry and eggs is totally inade-quate. It is a mistake to miss so great an opportunity.

PRODUCTION OF LIVE STOCK.

The Farm Cow and Dairying-The out a milk cow is increasing his living costs and impairing the living costs and impairing the health of his family. We must, therefore, devise some way to have a milk cow on every one of the 310,737 farms in Georgia. The food needed to keep a cow can be raised on 3 to 5 acres of land. Can as much be made on this acreage to cotton in 1921? Milk is the most perfect as well as the cheapest food. The mainutrition of many of our children can be most effectively remedied by its use.

dairies in the state to supply the urban population. Cheese produced at north Georgia cheese factories won first premium at the Southeastern fair in 1920 over several other states competing. In this section the farmer can well afford to put some of his best land to permanent pasture to increase the number of such factories. Cheese is imported into the state annually by the car load. Georgia cows and grasses should have a chance to make this unnecessary.

Get a cow and give her something to est and a place to grase.

SUGGESTIONS

cattle. They furnish one of the very best means of turning roughage into dollars. Raise only good grade or purebred cattle. The scrub consumes as much and yields less. Use only purebred sires. Now is an opportune time to purchase good purebred sires of all kinds at a low cost. Now is the time to diversify and begin to furnish the beef consumed in Georgia. Hogs Georgia still imports much cured pork. It is true that the price reduced, but the farmer who is able to store and cure his meat can no doubt dispose of it satisfactorily during the summer months of 1921. Farmers who have individual curing state where but few hogs are kept an opportunity to seed more feed crops for grazing and so make their own meat. Cured meat is still high in price. Why buy that which can be made at home? Hogs when pro-vided with sufficient grazing crops furnish a quick turnover on a rela-tively small investment. Lessen the emphasis on cotton and place more of it on the mortgage lifter.

nite system of grazing crops .for The grazing areas should be hogs. The grazing areas should be established as nearly as possible on a twelve months' basis. When this condition obtains in reality, then it will not be necessary to force about 75 per cent of the hogs for sale on the market during a period of about 90 days, as at present. Let us change this condition and distribute the marketing of hogs throughout the year.

twenty-third of a sheep per capita has literally gone to the dogs. Where there is permanent pasture and field grazing, each farm in the state could well afford to grow a gew sheep, provided the dog menace is guarded.

There are large areas of land not now being utilized in different parts of Georgia which could be used to ood advantage in furnishing graz-g for sheep. Purebred rams, with attive ewes, furnish an economic curce of food and income.

Horses and Mules-If some of the manent pasture, there is opportunity o grow the work stock needed.
The decrease in work stock roughout the United States during the last decade was 77 per 1.000 inabitants. Eventually there will

Cotton-The man who grows cot Irish potatoes should be increased prepare to raise the crop as cheaply as possible against a low or declining market. It is certain cotton is the south's best cash crop. We no longer hold an absolute world monopoly on it, however, since we are now raising only 55 per cent of the world's supply. Other countries, such as Brazil, China, India and Egynt are increasing their producagriculture in the cotton-growing dozen or more foreign students in better than some of the other crops.

Rice—The lowland areas of south Georgia are well adapted to growing rice. In many sections upland rice grows well. Why continue to purchase, therefore, millions of pounds from other sections each year?

Tobacco—A conservative acreage on the light soil areas adapted to this crop can be grown. More attention must be given to improving the quality and properly curing and marketing the crop. Overproduction is to be avoided. Inexperienced growers should not plant tobacco.

Home Orchards—Curtail some of this program by the various leaders and organizations throughout the cotton states. Since the boll weevil has invaded all of Georgia's cotton growing area, it is more essential than ever that not more than one-third of our cultivated land be planted to cotton in 1921. Let us be normal in cotton on 4,500,000 acres in 1921 at a relatively low cost per pound by instituting intensive methods of cultivation. This will represent a reduction of at least 1,000,000 acres over 1920.

OBSERVATIONS ON SITUATION.

1. It is certain that the farmer, as the basic producer, must be kept going. The banker and supply merthis respect the same as the farmer. The right kind of team work will aid much in carrying out a constructive program for 1921.

2. More attention to economic production is absolutely essential. It is too expensive to half way prepare the soil by allowing only 7-8 of a horse or mule to the man. Let us use less man power and more horse and machine power. Double the man's earning capacity by doubling the power ahead of him. 3. Cut down unnecessary expenses and save wherever practical. The organization of the farm means of organization of the farm means of maintaining soil fertility, efficiency of labor, returns from fertilizer, utilization of live stock, and marketing and distributing problems must be carefully studied. Study these factors separately and in the relationship of the operation of the farm as a unit. Keep an adequate farm record. Ascertain which farm crops are profitable and eliminate those representing a loss.

A WISE FARM POLICY. The State College of Agriculture, with the farm bureau organization-which is jointly subsidiary to the state college and the federal department of agriculturehas worked out a rural policy, outlined in full elsewhere in this issue of The Constitution, that is not only progressive and fundamentally sound, but which means millions of dollars to the state, if followed.

It is predicted upon the broad theory that the state's first concern is to provide for the physical requirements of its own population, and to do it by utilizing the resources within its own borders.

That Georgia is abundantly capable of doing that, and much more, is patent; that it never has done that, and is not doing it now, is clearly proven by mathematical deductions and statistics which are featured in the presentation.

For instance, it is shown that

Georgia's human and domestic animal populations present requirements of one hundred million bushels of corn, whereas we produced last year only sixty-nine million bushels: we require 7,500,000 bushels of wheat per annum, while last year our production was only 2,110,000 bushels; we need 18,750,-100 bushels of sweet potatoes a year and our production was only 13,-764,000 bushels last year: we have a state demand for 4,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes, as against which we last year raised less year we produced only half as great a peanut yield as our requirements called for, and to meet our annual demand for 253,843,822 dozen of eggs we produced last year less than 24,000,000 dozen.

So it goes: We produced a vast amount of cotton, a great part of which is now a drug on the market, and perhaps most of it will still be on hands when this rear's crop is gathered; while we imported a large amount of our food necessities from the north, east and west.

And yet, there is not a state in the union that is better adapted to the profitable growing of corn, wheat, sweet and Irish potatoes, peanuts, eggs, beef, pork, mutton, etc., than Georgia!

What the state college is endeavoring to do is to educate the farmers of Georgia to a point where they will realize the absolute folly of the methods they are now pursuing, and induce them to get clear away from the one-crop idea, and put Georgia in a position where it can live at home!

As the statement prepared by the state college aptly declares: "To spend money outside of Georgia for the purchase of such supplies under existing conditions is an indefensible policy!"

In the matter of pork products. as a concrete illustration of the utterly absurdity of this policy, Georgia is capable of leading the country as a "hog state." As the state college points out, "tests conducted at the Moultrie (Ga.) packing plant have shown that a proper combination of corn, peanut meal and sweet potatoes proquee first quality meat at the low est cost."

And yet Georgia, to which these three basic ingredients of first quality meat at the lowest cost" are indigenous, annually buys large part of its pork from the west, while it raises tton-cotton that ade that not more than one-third of the cultivated land in Georgia should be devoted to cotton cultivation in any year," which is a policy The Constitution has been urging for many years.

Cotton cannot be sold for anywhere near enough to defray the cost of production, and a large part of last year's yield will be carry-over surplus adding to this year's production.

Every bale of cotton that is produced this year will proportionately cheapen every bale that is carried over from last year's crop; and so it naturally follows that by producing only one bale this year the farmer will receive more for it than for two bales. In other words, all the cotton he piles on top of the carry-over crop will not only depreciate its own value, but lessen the value of the cotton he already has and is unable to dispose of at a paying price.

How utterly nonsensical-how absolutely insane—it would be for the farmers of the cotton states to go ahead this year and devote normal acreage to cotton under hese conditions!

The State College of Agriculture, in admonishing a radical curtailment of cotton acreage and a corresponding increase in food and feed crops acreage, and at the same time applying its energies to the working out of a broad, feasible and practicable plan of marketing and distribution of farm products, is performing a great service to the state.

If this program is generally adopted as the result of the pressure of existing conditions, then our travail will have been a blessing in disguise.

HUSTON, OF TENNESSEE.

That the south, whose democratic solidarity was last November broken for the first time since the civil war, is entitled to recognition in President Harding's cabinet is almost universally conceded. Newspapers all over the south.

The Constitution among them the south be accorded this measure of recognition by the republican administration.

Among the most prominently this section is C. H. Huston, of Chattanooga, who is nationally known, and who has the addisan standpoint, of having been chairman of the republican organ-

"solid south" and its switch to the republican column was attributable in a large part to the remarkable campaign that was made by the Harding forces under Mr. Huston's able leadership-and Tennessee's deflection was particularly significant because it is not a border state.

tensive property holdings scattered here and there in all parts of the south, his interests being confined to no one state. He is an industrial master builder. Few than 2,000,000 bushels in 1920; last | men have a broader acquaintance throughout the south.

In considering available men for cabinet positions, President Harding could do no better than to include among his cabinet advisors this worthy and deserving Tennesseean.

The appointment would meet with universal approval.

TIME TO DISARM. "Limit armaments to the standard of our unfortified Canadian border and the world will thankfully follow suit," says the Wall Street Journal

This is a patriotic and humane suggestion, and to the right point; and it is exactly in line with rank injustice in it. General Pershing's eloquent and forceful appeal for world-wide curtailment of armaments, expressed at a notable dinner given war sufferers in Europe.

"It would appear," said the general-

"that the lessons of the past six years should be enough to convince everybody of the danger of nations striding up and down the earth armed to the teeth. But no one nation can reduce armaments un-

"Isn't it time, then," he asked-"for an awakening among enlightened peoples to the end that the leading powers may reach some national agreement which would not only relieve the world of this ter-rible financial load, but which in itself would be a long step toward the prevention of war?"

And he advances the following argument which is as conclusive as any proposition, arrived at through a process of reasoning, can be:

"Ours is not an aggressive na tion. We want no territory, and we have no designs on other people If other nations have the same attitude, it seems unreasonable not to believe that all would be willing to prove it by consenting to limit armaments. Unless some such move be made, we may well ask ourselves whether civilization does not really reach a point where it begins to have editorially suggested that thus doomed to go headlong through destructive war and darkness to

But even were the world able to indefinitely withstand the financial strain imposed by an ever increasing armament, the probablities are that the rivalry for supremacy at arms will lead to another world war, compared with which the late war will appear as a mere outpost skirmish!

The world could not withstand such a shock; and civilization cannot afford to incur such a ghastly hazard.

Going "armed to the teeth," as General Pershing puts it, and constant additions to armaments and war equipments not only anticipates another cataclysmic war, but invites it!

The thing to do is for all na tions to agree not to arm against each other just as the United States and Canada did years ago. The hazard involved in the present international policy is indicated by a statement recently given to the press by Baron Hayashi, the new Japanese ambassa dor to Great Britain.

"This talk in the United States about a big navy is very annoying to Japan," said the ambassador, in London: and he continued-

"It is foolish and it is tragic to think of the big states of Great Britain, the United States and Japan competing in a race for armament Japan cannot afford it."

Baron Hayashi expressed the belief that-

GIVE HIM A CHANCE. Frequently the news columns of the daily press carry reports of men being released from prison after completing the terms of their sentences for crime, only to be nabbed at the gate by waiting officers and hustled off to some distant jail to stand trial for an old offense, the outcome in most instances being their return to serve out a new sentence.

Some time ago The Constitution editorially called attention, not only to the incongruity in this policy, but to the possibility of

In that instance our comment was based upon the particular case of a young man who had admittedly committed a series of recently in New York in behalf of offenses against the law in various parts of the country; who had at last been caught, convicted on a specific charge, and sent to the Atlanta federal prison for a term

> He had "taken his medicine like a man," been a "model prisoner," and for months counted the days until he would be released. In the meantime he had manifested every evidence of having reformed; and he had made his plans to "start all over again" and live thenceforth the life of an industrious, law-respecting, patriotic citizen-grateful, in fact, to the law for having set him right in his attitude toward society.

But after shaking hands with the warden, and as he stepped forth hopefully into the world, he was met at the outer gate by an officer with a warrant; and, his hope supplanted by despair, he was handcuffed and dragged away to a northern state to answer to the charge of another offense committed while his habits had been those of the criminal.

The chances are that he is today languishing in some penitentiary, with years of imprisonment destroy itself, and whether we are and a future of hopeless uncertainty; for it is always easier for prosecutors to convict a former offender than one whose past life has been without prison blemish.

Another case, similar in many respects, is briefly described in the following news item that appeared in The Constitution Wednesday morning-

"Having completed a four-year sentence in the Atlanta federal penitentiary, after conviction on the charge of rifling the United States mails, Edward Wilson, of Reading. Pa., will be sent under guard to Trenton, N. J., there to be tried under an indictment charging him with robbing the postoffice at North Branch, N. J., five years ago. Wilson denies that he participated in the robbery, and states that he will employ counsel to establish his innocence.

We maintain that in such case world over, for if this business of as this the former transgressor international competition in arma- does not receive a square deal at ments continues much longer in- the hands of the law, and also that lanta for a moment and forget New theory upon which the criminal The Business law is supposed to operate: That is, that the two main purposes of imprisonment for crime are, first, to maintain the dignity of, and compel respect for, the law and legal institutions; second, to reform offenders and to redeem those who have "gone wrong," and to make of them useful citizens.

In other words, the intent of the law is to consider wrong-doers as being cifizens who are morally sick, and its purpose is attained when, and not until, the "patient," so-called, is "cured."

Therefore, if a given penitentiary term leaves the one having served it still inspired with criminal intent-still unreformed, still "morally sick"-he is not ready to be put back into society.

But if, on the other hand, the indications all point to the fact that he has been "cured," that he is normal in his attitude toward society and the law, and that he really and sincerely wants to reestablish himself and be of use, instead of a menace, to the world, certainly society and the law owe it to him, as a human entity made "in the image of God," to overlook the past-or at least to suspend judgment upon past transgressions and to give him a chance to 'make good!" Application of the other policyfor which faults in our punitive system, and not our officers of the law, are wholly to blame-is what has given only too much semblance of truth to the old saying, so common in police circles, that "once a criminal, always a criminal!"

When crime becomes so prevalent as to assume the proportions of a well organized business it seems to me to be wise to pause and in-quire what are the conditions in your ommulaty which are favorable the success of such an enterprise? Business instantly suggests the well-known economic law of "supply and demand." But I am in terested, as a student of ethics, to know how we should classify their patrons. It is clear to tme that these criminals would not have come to Atlanta unless there had been a criminal atmosphere favor-able to their business.

But this hide-and-seek game of nunting for causes of effects will not let us stop here. We must account for the atmosphere. What is the general attitude of Atlanta toward gambling? I should say that in general the Atlanta people, when their attention is called to the question, would not approve of a professional gambling establishment. Many would even call it a gambling "hell" and shudder a little bit at the sound. And yet here in our beloved city it is difficult for a woman to find compaions for a game of bridge unless she is willing to win her friend's money or lose to her neighbor. As disagreeable as the truth is, it seems plain that these perfectly fespectable, and even charming, gambling parties in our drawing rooms tend to breed in our people the very passion with which crooks and criminals de business. not let us stop here. It is the high price which contraband whisky commands which tempts men to enter this lawless life and which often leads them into other crimes which they never dreamed of committing. For this reason it is only our well-to-do citizens who can afford to command their services. I cannot believe that the large numbers of our mer and women who in homes of com-fort and culture sip their liquors in the charm of comradship have faced the truth that they are doing so at the cost of building up a powerfu criminal class in our community. One hates to picture to his imagination the tragic background of many of our social parties. The liquor which has transformed the natural verve and enthusiasm of youth into an artificial riot of rowdylsm has been purchased at the sacrifice of our safety under the law and brought to them often at the peril of the lives of others. If bootlegger who kills a little in his reckless ride to mak illegal sale shall be charged murder what shall be the charge against those who have promised to Lawlessness, in its last analysis is not simply the violation of a statute. It is rather a certain statute. It is rather a certain quality of character. It is the willingness to get what one wants at the cost of the welfare and rights of others. Of course its expression is more horrid and revolting in some cases than in others, but the point needs to be made that it is a spiritual disease and that it is contagious. The smug respectability of a large number of our citizens who are willing to "Condone the crimes they have a mind to And damn the ones they're not inclined to" must be brought to see the truth that in their flagrant violation of one law, they are making it easier for men to violate all laws.

"Hezeklah Penny is a provincial do poet who began by writing provencal verse." Now of course any slightly lettered person can readily perceive that 'Hezekiah Penny's name is nothing more than an equally Hebraic "Christian" name with a less opulent member of the great triumvirate of pounds, shillings and pence—the exigencies of English libel law make these not very subtle little variations the better part of discretion. Born in Philadelphia. in spite of Mr. Mackensie' frivolities, it is not every poet who

Pound suffered in the first place from the difficulty of having been born in that pleasant city which is a Broadway by-word for the pace of the tortoise. His father was called Homer L. Pound and had his young son christened Ezra Loomis. Ezra Loomis Pound! It sounds like nothing so much as one of the cheerful old salts of Mr. J. C. Lincoln's yarns—"Cap'n Ezra Pound" might be another of the unvarious brotherhood of Cap'n Obed Bankses and Keziah Coffins and Cap'n Dans and Obadiah Burgesses. And from that unpromisingly titled youth Mr. Pound has made the heir to the poetically named Theophile Gauters and Jules Laforgues and Gustave Flauberts—to Bohemian Rodolpho himself, Romeo and Juliet died in a gallant attempt to prove dolpho himself, Romeo and Juliet died in a gallant attempt to prove that there is little or nothing in a name, but Mr. Pound has done it for them and lives to tell the taile every time that Poetry and the Little Review delight the world. He has 'ven persuaded a fair lady to abandon the charming name of Mistress Dorothy Shapeskeare to become Mrs. Ezra Pound.

But nowadays one cannot be poet-there are specialists even in the arts. And so, in days even in the arts. And so, in days that no doubt seem ante-glacial to him. Mr. Pound was an imagist. Some time during the alarums and excursions of the war he very publicly became a vorticist, and he became a vorticist with much more pomp than Cardinal Newman became a Catholic. That epochal change, one understands, was manifestated.

But if a poet is to get his flam ing genius out from under the bushel he must find some more

Once upon a time a girl called Sylvia Scarlett, who lived in a book called by the same chromatic title, went to tea with a painter called Ronald Walker. At his studio in Grosvenor road she met a number of "the fierce young geniuses of today"—there were Azurists, who found all the world blue without being the victims of melancholy; there were Blanchists, who repudiated color and whose blank canvases depended on the angle at which they were hung; there were Cvists, who maintained that everything resolves litself into ovals; there were Combinationists, whose most famous picture so far "consisted of half a match box, a piece of orange peel and some sealing wax, all stuck upon a piece of sugar paper.

"It was that picture which inhis ima of the essential bin is better than the irrational uvulas of modern poets.

"That caused almost as great ensation as the picture, because ome of his fellow-poets maintained that he had no right to speak or anybody but himself."

Washington, D. C., January 3.—Perhaps as a warning against too extreme optimism at this interesting moment, the world is confronted by still another German crisis at the outset of the New Year. In reality there is little new in the crisis itself; it is only one more phase of the eternal German question, which the treaty of Versailles did not and could not settle. situation in the British Isles.

FRANCE WANTS

EQUAL SECURITY. Thus the Lloyd-George cabinet has been under pressure all the time to exert its influence to compel the French to permit the accnomic restoration of Germany and to oppose French policies in Russia and Germany both. The fact that Germany's course menaces French security does not much affect the average British laboring man, as contrasted with the statesman; he does not care about that. Nor does he recognize that Britan obtained security by the detsruction of the German navy, but that France has yet to obtain equal security. These are too involved considerations, match weigh with statesmen but not with the general public and matters which it is exceedingly hard for statesmen to make clear to their constituencies.

As a consequence the George has

As a consequence the George has ll along been in the difficult position of striving to moderate French tion of striving to moderate French activities and at the same time to preserve Anglo-French solidarity in the presence of domestic protest prompted by an unsympathetic and selfish view of French conditions. The difficulty, so far from being abolished, remains patent at the present moment. In point of fact the British government has not the smallest excuse for refusing to support the French if they choose to act, because of German violations of the Spa agreement. But on the other hand, such French action would certainly arouse British protest and would probably postpone British industrial recovery at home. a reduction in the strength of the tired, but naturally his arguments Such are the more obvious cir-umstances in the present situation. But one has now to reckon with the reactions of the opinions in the three nations upon each other. Thus the French are at the moment roused alike by the recent expedition of German ministers into the occupied districts, which was marked by outrageous speeches on their part calculated to rouse the people of these regions against the French troops and promote dangerous resistances, and by the belief that German failures to comply with the treaty of Versailles are due to the belief that Great are due to the belief that Great Britain will compel France to agree to modifications of these terms. Both of these circumstances tend to make the French more insistent upon action than they might otherwise be.

The Germans, on their side, do one has now to reckon with the most rigorous military terms sia from regaining an military strength. Yet Prussia managed to evade those terms and eight years later to play a decisive part in the overthrow of Napoleon. France does not mean to be caught the same way again.

The Germans, on their side, do frankly expect to obtain from the British assistance which will enable British assistance which will enable them to escape from the worst of the Versailles provisions. Quite stupidly, however, they fall to distinguish between economic and military terms or to recognize that in the last analysis the British must and will support the French on military issues, whatever stand they may take upon industrial questions. This is demonstrated by the present crisis, in which the British course has so far been so correct as to silence French criticism.

REPARATIONS

cupation of German territory and ARE VITAL ever, the present crisis is most im ple, that the Germans have violated portant when viewed in its relation their pledges.

The German situation is not less complicated. The German government is also very weak, it has lost ground steadily in past months. It is pushed on one side by the old Junker elements, which sympathize mans. In both cases the Germans are obviously maneuvering with the hope that they can, by using the military question, obtain concessions in the economic field, for the Silesian question is economic quite as much as political and the loss of the district will totally change Germany's rank as an industrial nation. wholly with the Bavarian attitude. Indeed many Prussians are now in Munich aiding and abetting in the Bavarian action. It is pushed in But the question of reparations is even more vital. France stands squarely on the ground that the squarely on the ground that the treaty of Verasilles was a contract, signed as such by all nations represented at Versailles and binding upon all nations which have ratified it. To France it represents the minimum of justice and the lowest possible estimate of conditions essential to the solvency and safety of France. In the last ow years France. In the last two years francs in restoring the devastated regions and this vast expenditure has by no means completed or even half completed-the work. So far she has received not a single france from Germany, nor is there any immediate prospect of any such payment as is essential. not only will the government lack the troops to enforce obedience, but cannot depend on such troops as it has, since the army remains in the hands or the old order. But the socialists, the labor elements, the republicans as contrasted with the socialists, the labor elements, the republicans as contrasted with the monarchists, now propose to use the weapon of the strike against the Bavarians. Thus the Ruhr coal miners can compel the government to refuse to ship coal to Bavaria, under threat of refusing to produce coal at all. The result would be the prostration of Bavarian industry. But Barvaria, on her side, may meet this challenge by some separatist step, which would destroy Germunity.

One must recogniez the fact, however exaggerated the conclusions sometimes drawn from it, that there is a marked anti-Prussian spirit in Bavaria, as well as an even stronger conservative sentiment, which is netly hostile to the more radical ideas prevailing in portions of Prussia, notably in the highly industrialized regions of the west. A Bavarian secession, followed by the recall of the Bavarian dynasty, even the effort to establish this Wittelsbach dynasty in place of the Hohenrollern, is not out of the possibilities. Moreover, all Germans know well that France would welcome any break between nerth and south Germany for obvious reasons.

RUHR MINERS

French insistence now upon the letter of the treaty of Versailles and the text of the Spa agreement is as much to be traced to French policy in the matter of reparations as to French apprehension over Bavaria actions at the present hour. To consent to amendments to the treaty in the pending case and over the military terms would establish precedent for modification in the economic terms. To avoid this France stands squarely upon the letter of the law in both instances. And this is what the French people demand that the government shall do. ficult. It lacks the power to coerce Bavaria and if it should obtain power, to use it would merely mean to provoke Bavarian secession. But if the government falls to act then the labor elements, notably the miners of the Ruhr, may take the matter into their own hands and by strike seek to coerce Bavaria. The danger here is that such a strike might easily get out of hand and lead to a new revolution, to a real civil war between the reactionary and republican elements in the Reich.

GIVEN CREDENCE The strength of the French posi-tion, as even Mr. Keynes recognized, lies in the fact that the law nized, lies in the fact that the law is with France. Germany agreed in the treaty to do certain things and the allies or France agreed with her that Germany should, if necessary, be compelled to do these things. The weakness of the French position lies in the fact that certain writers, like Keynes, have obtained wide credence in English-speaking countries for the idea that Germany cannot comply with the terms of the treaty, and that this argument appeals to the selfish interests particularly in Great Britain, which are concerned, not with French problems, but with British.

The British, or a considerable

SUSPICIOUS OF BRITISH

But French public opinion quite as frankly views British effort to restore Germany for economic reasons with disapproval and sus-picion; and absolutely refuses to permit the government to yield, either in military or economic conditions. What arrives is a sort of deadlock which is fatal to the desires and interests of both the Brit-ish and the French, encourages the Germans to resist, but in the end exposes them to the consequences of their resistance, as in the case of the occupation of Frankfort last summer.

No once can quite describe the situation in Germany today, with convincing accuracy. The French believe that the Germans are striving to prepare a revanche, they see in German actions many indications, they are able to collect much evidence to prove that the old order, the old ideas, the old aspirations survive and will prevail. The Frenchman, in fact, sees in the present Germany precisely the things which were so dangerous for him in the Germany of 1914, or for that in matter in the Germany of 1870. And it is not possible to prove that the Frenchman may not be right. Morgover, it is for him a question of life and death, so his apprehensions are not surprising. believe that the Germans are striv-

BOTH ARE AT

LOGGERHEADS As for the Englishman, he sees Germany crushed, her fleet gone, her power for resistance in con-temporary time abolished. He believes that if she can get to work the dangers for the future will be small. But he also recognizes for Britain the advantage if Germany does get to work and his judgment, like the Frenchman's, is manifestly influenced by his own personal stake in the situation. He thinks that the Frenchman's failure to see the German situation as he sees it, is due to French hatred of Germany and to what he regards as French chauvinism. The Frenchman regards the Englishman's failure to see eye for eye with him, as proof of the Englishman's betrayal of him for the profits to be realized in German trade.

As for the German, he reasons, lieves that if she can get to work

As for the German, he reasons that this difference between the Frenchman and the Englishman will in the end, lead to British interin the end, lead to British intervention on behalf of Germany and thus enable Germany to escape payment and disarmament. To this cause must be attributed not a few German failures to comply with the peace terms. Yet this German conclusion is fundamentality inaccurate because the Englishman is bound to support the Frenchman in the end, whenever the quest'on of disarmament is raised, and the French can prove German bad faith, wh'le in the economic field. French always holds the power to crush Germany.

DISARMAMENT INCOMPLETE

This latter circumstance is too lit-ile appreciated by the people on this side of the water, although recognized in Europe. Foch and Petain ognized in Europe. Foch and Petain in the recent dispute over the shortening of the period of service in the French army, pretty satisfactorily proved that France, today, can dispose of Germany with relative ease. Germany is not as complete disarmed as she should be, under the treaty of Versailles, but she could not now resist French military strength, particularly since the French hold the Rhine bridgeheads from Mayence to Switzerland.

Thus, if Germany refuses to comply with the terms of the treaty of Versailles, if the failure is complete and unduestioned, even if the allies of France do not join her, France has the necessary power to coerce Germany. Not only that, but the whole public sentiment of France would support the government in such a case, for all France feels with equal intensity that Germany must pay and disarm. And there is no power in the world which in the last analysis could interfere effectively. For France alone remains a great military power. Most Germany perceive this and that is why Germany has, in most instances, capitulated, once she has been sure France would act and that neither the British nor the Americans would interpose. the whole public sentiment of France

BAVARIAN

SECESSION The Bavarian dispute, however, raised a new issue, for German unity is involved and the attempt of the is involved and the attempt of the German government to exert force and te coerce Bavaria might lead to Bavarian secession. If that came France might be expected to support, rather than to attack Bavaria, since French policy would welcome the restoration of the old separation between north and south Germany. Thus to carry out the treaty of Versailles and to compel Bavaria to conform to French demands, might end by serving French purposes and shattering German unity. In reality the present crisis does not seem as acute as that of last community of action on the part of the British and the French. The French are so far proceeding me-thodically, establishing their case while the British are recognizing the fact that they are bound by their own promsies, if France proves her case. Still there is an unmis-takable feeling in Great Britain that the French are exaggerating the extent of the peril and there will doubtless be protest and angry criti-cism if France compels military ac-tion. community of action on the part of CONCESSIONS in forcing action as in establish-ing in principle the inviolability of the treaty of Versailles with a clear eye upon the reparations negotiations which are coming shortly. The French feel that the Germans are French feel that the Germans are trying to wring economic consessions by advancing and then withdrawing the disarmament issue and they are seeking to block this maneuver. They are also concerned with the fact that the Spa agreement as to coal deliveries has expired and the Germans have failed to accept a new agreement, much more advantageous to France.

In sum, the present German crisis

In sum, the present German crisis represents a chronic rather than an cute trouble, but it contains all to lead to a new and very disturb-ing situation, in which another German revolution is only the worst of tical peace, very little is really set-tied in the German question, while, of course, the same is to be said of both the Russian and eastern ques-

Members of Georgia Press Gather at Hotel Lanier, Macon, January 17.

McRae, Ga., January 8 .- (Special.) President J. K. Simmons of the Georgia Press association has just issued a call for the mid-winter meeting of the association, which neeting will be held in Macon, at Hotel Lanier, Monday, January 17.

This meeting will be held in con junction with a meeting of the Advertise Georgia Enterprise called by Governor Dorsey, possibly in-cluding the state bankers, merchants and business men of state.

The editors will meet at o'clock in the morning on the date named, and will talk shop until 11 o'clock, when they will meet in a body with the other organizations. They will again meet in executive session at 3 o'clock and remain in session until the business in hand

There are some very important questions to come before the asso questions to come before the association at this meeting, Mr. Simmons prices of materials used in certain other lines of business as well as the cost of labor, the cost of printing is as high or higher than it was the fact that there is no decline in the cost of doing business in the printing world, there is a tendency on the part of some publishers to reduce their prices, Mr. Simmons

The matter of organizing and sending a delegation of Georgia publishers to the meeting of the National Editorial association to be held in Miami, Fla., and the possible entertainment of the northern, western and eastern publishers as they come through Georgia will also be taken up. There will be about 500 publishers from other states who will come or go back through Georgia.

solve publishers from other states who will come or go back through Georgia.

These mid-winter meetings were started last winter and this will be a strictly business meeting. Mr. Simmons states, no entertainment during this session being permitted. Nothing but business problems are to be discussed. The press association were sounded out in December as to the best date to have this meeting and January 10 was decided on. At the urgent request of Governor Dorsey, chairman of the Advertise Georgia campaign, the date was put off another week, until January 17, in order that the press association might meet with the other organizations.

President Simmons states in his interview that he wants every member of the association to be on hand as some important problems are going to be discussed. The discussion will be informal.

Let's Give Ourselves a Start

In every line of trade and industry there was a more substantial tone in Atlanta during the past week. No one was terribly wrough over the amount of business done but several large wholesale uses stated that their volume of business had been greater than in week since September. Retail merchants reported an unusually good business and there was a feeling on the part of the public that the time had come for looking for the silver lining a little more dillgently than has been the custom in the past few months.

The fact is that the scare is over. This doesn't mean, however, that everything is going to boom. Far from it. It means that a soberminded lot of people—in place of a lot of wild-eyed spendthrifts—will be in the saddle from now on. There is a changed viewpoint. And the many price reductions in practically all lines have brought about the change in viewpoint. Of course, the other change came first—the change from riotous living and everything that went with it, to a badly frightened and non-buying public.

Price reductions have made many people feel that even if things got bad the possibility of getting by was better with the actual living costs cut down. Groceries, drygoods and even rents have taken a tumble. Back to "normalcy" is what some of the learned ones call it out just back to brass tacks is the way the general public likes to think of it. Besides it never did seem exactly right when you could go week after week and month after month and never see a single "For Rent" sign. Everybody just naturally got lonesome. Several have appeared recently in Atlanta. And that means the rainbow still

All we want now is to give ourselves a start. The "shouting and tumult" have largely ceased. We are very much sobered down. It's fine weather and spring will soon be here. And there's the Georgia sunshine, too. After all it seemed worse than it really was. But let's get busy and give ourselves a start. That's all that's needed now.

At the last national convention of the American Bankers' association, held in Washington, D. bad, so they declare, and about the only reason that it is written at the present time is to get the business that comes along with it.

Why this class of business has become more hazardous than other kinds of automobile insurance was explained by one underwriter, who said that a man who purchased a car, say, at $1,500, and is paying for it by the month now finds that he could have bought the car for $1,200 if he had waited, but now must go on paying $1,500 to get the car. This condition naturally has brought about a serious moral hazard and might induce the owner of the car to burn it in order to get back the original value of the car which was insured for $1,500.

A remedy for this situation, of course, is the writing of a limited value on the policy which would make the insured pay a small part in the event of the car becoming a claim. This will probably be adopted by all the companies writing the class in a very short time and is being given serious consideration, he said.

Local underwriters say that Atlanta is not troubled with this particular kind of moral hazard, so after all we are probably not in such desperate shape down here as we thought we were.

must have a natural liking for his work. If he does not he starts with a handicap.

No matter what education a secretary has had, his work is of such a character that he must carry on his education unendingly. He must improve himself by study on the widest possible scale, through such books as have been suggested in various meetings as helpful secretarial literature. He should find time to read extensively in order that he may measure up mentally with his directors in the knowledge of economics, finance, transportation, municipal administration, social science, political economy, town planning, etc.

A secretary must acquire learning for his professions of the act by giving notice of such rejection in the manner provided in the act. In the absence of such socies all persons subject to the act are presumed to have accepted the same. Notice of ence, political economy, town planning, etc.

A secretary must acquire learning for his profession somewhat comparable to the professional preparedness of the engineer, the lawyer, and the doctor. But learning by itself, without the faculty of translating it into action, will be practically worthless. A secretary must, therefore, have that faculty. While we cannot all have fluent powers of speech, every secretary should undertake to acquire sufficient ability in public speaking to be able to express himself concisely and effectively in any gathering. Many men of great ability, lacking this qualimication, have been not only handicapped, but their efforts have been seriously impaired and support to many worthy projects lost.

The secretary must not neglect have accepted the same. Notice of rejection must be given to the industrial commission and served upon the employer or employee (as the case may be) of the person rejecting. The secretary must not neglect the primary purposes of his office—keeping good records, proceedings, and staying within his budget, and a controlling idea should be to so understand his work that a given object, even the unanticipated, can be accomplished with a minimum of expense. Anyone cam do almost anything if he has unlimited money to spend, but we do not generally have that, and it should be a secretary's ambition to be able to accomplish any desired piece of work with whatever regular force he has and with whatever committee service he may command.

Such entanglements with sooner or later ensare him in embarrassing situations and difficulties from which the only relief will be his resignation. The secretary must bear in mind that in his relation the first one with whom an outsider comes in constact. He must establish and maintain the proper relation toward the public, all committees and the membership at large. He should know in his place, and the qualities outlined earlier in this prosentation establish that. He should fill it with proper dignity, bearing in mind that he is expected to be the personification of the organization. these articles.

In conclusion, the writer desires to repeat that the act, although new to deorgia, is not revolutionary in the sense that it presents a ary in the sense that it presents a new and untried system. Compensation laws having received almost universal adoption in all the states, have become fixed as a part of the economic system of this country.

The original American laws were based in large part upon the provisions of the English act. There are, therefore, a large number of court decisions construing workmen's compensation laws and placing judicial interpretations upon provisions which are common to nearly all of the laws. When the legislature of Georgia adopted a workmen's compensation law it, therefore, inaugurated a system thoroughly established, fortified and clarified by judicial interpretation.

Not Burdensome.

Not Burdensome.

The burden of compensation payments should not weight to any appreciable extent upon the employer, for the reason that the insurance policies protect against uhusual occurrences and in consideration of the premium fixed, stand behind all compensation payments. The rates for compensation insurance must be approved by the insurance commissioner and the form of policies by the industrial commission. No company can write compensation insurance in Georgia unless licensed to do business in this state.

With the holiday shopping season at hand, a stimulation in business can be expected. A gradual lowering of prices of nearly all commodities has produced some activity, but mostly where reductions were advertised extensively.

In their endeavor to clean out high-priced goods, dealers are forcing sales to the limit, in order to be ready for fresh spring goods at a probable lower level. Close and earnest co-operation between manufacturer, jobber and retailer will produce a better effect on the public by inspiring confidence.

Looking into the future will do more good than considering your present plight. Put your shoulder to the wheel and push. If expenses can be cut, do it. If advertising will do some good, do it. Re-arrange your stock and re-decorate your window. Hang up some good signs in your window and your store. This is no time to "throw up the sponge." What is needed is a look into the future, strong courage and determination.—Southwark National Bank, Philadelphia.

The commodity panic attendant upon the readjustment period in both Europe and the United States virtually wiped out the Indian and Chinese export trade over night, and in something like eight months the rupee went from 48 cents to 25 cents and the tael from $1.70 to 70 cents.

Expressed in terms of taels and rupees, Chinese and Hindus have about 100 per cent profit in their gold and, in view of the famine in China and the hard times prevailing throughout the far east, the Orientals are now taking their profits in the way of sales of gold and the metal in the market is offered at prices which represent a discount of about 6 per cent.

Gold usually flows to the nearest premium market, and, in the case of India, Yokohama was the first absorber. The weight of this metal shortly began to tell on the Yen rate, which quickly fell from 51 1-2 cents to less than 48 cents, thereby making further exports unprofitable. There remains one premium market for the shipment of gold, and that is the United States. This explains the movement of gold from Bombay to New York and from

IX. DIRECT EXPORTING

A STATED in the last article under this head, exporting may be divided roughly into two classes, direct and indirect exporting. We have discussed the various indirect methods, viz: The export merchant, the export commission house and the manufacturer's sion house and the manufacturer's export agent; pointed out both advantages and disadvantages of doing business abroad through these agencies, and urged the manufacturer aspiring for export trade to adopt one or more of the direct methods which bring him into closer personal touch with the customer who buys his goods in some foreign land, and put his export business on a much firmer and lasting footing not subject to the caany time decide to give up his line

The Branch Office.

The Branch Office.

The branch office abroad is little different from that of the branch house located in the United States. Its principal purpose is to bring the manufacturer into the closest possible touch with his field. The branch house stocks large quantities of merchandise ready for quick delivery, travels its own local salesmen (usually natives well acquainted with the territory), keeps its fingers on the credit teeps its fingers on the credit bulse of its trade, studies local conlitions and anticipates and recom-nends alterations or improvements building business abroad; likewise it is quite apparent that it is a costly venture and cannot, therefore, be undertaken by any except the largest and most heavily financed houses who anticipate a nanced houses abroad. It has the further advantage of being open to receive the most direct methods for building business abroad. It has the further advantage of being open to receive the nanced houses arrived throught by advertising and correspondence.

In many instances so-called branch houses are really subsidiary selling companies of the manufacturers, sperating on a more or less independent basis from the home offices, marketing other nd sometimes ma marketing other

Not mly do men qualified for the exticting nature of this work demand arge salaries, which are no more han just compensation for their one training and experience, but raveling expenses are high. A conservative estimate figures an average of $10 a day throughout he trip from the time of leaving his country to his return. In addition, there are bound to be many ther sums represented by taxes on commercial travelers, entertain-them for the sale of their products (all non-competing) among the big plantation owners, or the dealers and importers catering to this class of trade. Likewise, the same scheme can be carried out (and is being yery successfully done) with hardware, printing and stationery, automotive and other groups.

A word of caution is well worth considering in this connection. No salesman traveling abroad can are

Any time decide to give up his line and take over that of a competitor who perhaps offers more attractive terms.

Plainly speaking, the manufacturer who goes into exporting to stay and expects to build up a permanent world-wide business has got to do it himself.

How he can best go about accomplishing this will be outlined in the following:

Direct exporting.

Direct exporting.

Direct exporting concerns itself with marketing goods abroad through either one or more of the following agencies: (1) The branch house; (2), the salesman traveling abroad; (3), direct-by-mail solicitation.

A word of caution is well worth on solicide in the considering in this connection. No salesman, traveling abroad, can expect to succed any more than he could in domestic markets if he attempts to carry too many lines. He is eartiant to be partial to the line or lines that move easiest and fastempts to carry too many lines. He is eartiant to be partial to the line or lines that move easiest and fastempts to carry too many lines. He tempts The Mail Order Campaign.

Business abroad is fundamentally no different from business in this country and a mail order campaign can be just as successfully carried out in Latin America as fn the United States. Some of the most

United States. Some of the most successful ventures in this field have, in fact, been made through use of this agency. The writer recalls two instances several years ago where a single advertisement brought a draft for about $2,500 with order attached for the purchase of a seven-passenger pleasure car and another order for light steel railway equipment and plantation locomotives that totaled over $200,000—and the entire deal originated and was carried throught by advertising and correspondence.

every one aspiring for export trade as the initial cost can be made as as the initial cost can be made as low as desired or prescribed by circumstances. To illustrate, a manufacture of an automobile polish with whom the writer has been acquainted for several years decided that he could not buck competition in this country because of the heavy national advertising being constantly carried on by three or more heavily financed concerns, although he had demonstrated that he had a product quite on a parity with the competing articles—and better than he had demonstrated that he had a product quite on a parity with the competing articles—and better than some. He had come to believe that the foreign field, especially Latin America, offered him his big chance, and acting on this assumption, cautiously entered on a campaign to "feel out" the market and line up dealer connections. He took small space advertising in one of the American export journals circulated abroad and supplemented this with a direct-by-mail campaign to a list

a direct-by-mail campaign to a list of names he had obtained at small expense. The expenses involved were translation and printing in expense. The expenses involved were translation and printing in Spanish of a small quantity of labels, circulars, letterheads and form letters, purchase of a mailing list, contract for half a dozen insertions of a small ad in the above referred to journal and registration of his trade mark abroad. Within a few weeks he received several encouraging replies, both 'rom importers and dealers interested in representing his line and consumers porters and dealers interested in representing his line and consumers interested in purchasing small trial orders. It was little time before he had established dealer connections and soon had a rapidly growing business under way. Today, practically his entire output is shipped to foreign countries, his product commands an unrivaled prestige and he is fast becoming independent from his venture. So far as the writer knows, he has never traveled a man out of this country or visited any of the foreign territories himself in the interest of promoting his sales abroad.

As the mail order campaign offers As the mall order campaign offers such attractive inducements to the manufacturer—especially the small house or the firm making its first venture in foreign fields—it is believed that a study of ways and means for mapping out and successfully carrying on such a sales plan would be well received and meet a definite need among Atlanta manufacturers. Hence, it is planned to go into some detail in future articles of this series in considering a practical mail order program.

Prime Minister Refuses to Aijow Opportunity for Local Option Vote to Be Taken.

Result in Scotland, Where Victory Was Expected, Was Overwhelming De-Not Kept.

By GEORGE CARLIN.

London, Jan. 8 .- The first fine rapture of the prohibition crusade bitionist is becoming temperate. The giddy intoxication of hope that made dry leaders announce a year ago that Great Britain would no longer be the home of the spree has been followed by a dreadful dawn: it isn't the dawn of a new era.

"St. George and the Wagon." The battle of St. George and the vagon would be fought to a finish. The prohibitionist, however, was so nearly finished by the encounter in Scotland that he has virtually retired for the present from English soil. He is recuperating his strength for another engagement in Scotland three years hence, when the local, option matter will again come be fore the Scotch communities which rejected it this year.

The trouble with a prohibitionist is that he never knows when he is dead; he's only groggy. But is Scotland, as the advance guard of Great Britain, has temporarily saved the day for Haig and Haig, Johnny Walker, Bass and Guinness, it is realized that the prohibitionist will wets, with England and Ireland succumbing about the same time.

Pussyfoot Johnson confidently predicted a year ago that England would be dry in ten years. Less op-timistic leaders would be happy now to believe it will be dry within a generation. And wet experts think that if the great mass of English voters had an opportunity to cast a prophesying ballot, a tremendous majority would say, "Never!"

Each one is entitled to his guess, but the prohibitionist backs up his guess with one of the strongest arguments-that of the demands of big business. It being assumed that big business can have about anything it wants, the argument is irrefutable. And in merrie England, big business has had a habit of getting things done.

made America the most formidable industrial competitor that we have in the world. Generally speaking, I vas impressed by the great prosperity of the United States, the above all, by the enormous industrial advantage they have already begun to reap from their policy of the prohibition of drink.

But certain English visitors re-turning from the United States, damn prohibition, without even the faintest of praise. Every week Lonion newspapers report views of individuals who have missed daily beer in New York and, being British and stubborn, determined to have their booze, law or no law; have found boot-leg stuff unutter-ably bad. No one seems to regard them as law breakers; Britain haeds tears of sympathy for them.

I had a talk with the Rt. Hon. Leif Jones, president of the United Kingdom Alliance, who is generally ecognized as the leading prohibiionist in England, and he told me that these reports from trans-Atantic visitors had proved harmful. He said he had been informed that the principal opponents of the profeat - King's Promi se hibition regime in the United States were found "in the middle classes among professional men and brain workers" (recalling the classic 'grand opera and music").

For his own part he was satisfied that the vast majority in the United States were well content with the here has worn off: even the prohi- Eighteenth amendment, and he felt it unfortunate that there were so many visitors to America who were constantly misrepresenting American point of view in England. I will not characterize him, but I'll say that the world will judge him ultimately not by his speeches nor by the words with which he smooths down deputations, but by the extent to which he fulfills his promises.

Mr. Leif Jones himself is an Asquithian liberal. In appearance and manner he conveys the impression of a courtly gentleman of the old school, even to the rosy colorfulness of his nose, so that, if one can might be tempted to victure him a gentleman whose burgundy and rort had been at his dinner table all of his days. One was reminded of the story of the red nosed man who announced he was a teetotler and who was fine twith the remark. "If you're teetotler, that nose of yours is a gross libel."

Warrior for Dry England.

Warrier for Dry England.

Mr. Leif Jones who is sometimes derisively referred to as "Tea-leaf Jones" has given a lifetime to the cause of prohibition. In parliament he was a leader of the movement to get drink legislation and, with the aid of those who saw the possibility of saving food resources through curtailing the manufacture and sale of liquor, he succeeded in getting the liquor control bill passed.

That bill is still in effect, although a wartime measure, and it leaves only six hours and a half a day in which drinks may be purchased. All spirits sold have to be 39 under proof. If parliament takes no further action, the signing of the peace treaty with Turkey will automatically end this war time control and England will go back to khe pre-war drinking hours of 5a. m. to midnight. (The failure of Turkey to sign the peace treaty is still keeping England as much at war as the failure of the United States to ratify Mr. Wilson's treaty.) It appears, however, that parliament will pass some measure making permanent the wartime restrictions, with probabilities of letting "Prohibition in the United States changes conditions here vitally," he said. "I can't doubt that in the economic sphere she will gain from 20 to 30 per cent on her production output. And the biggest problem here is how to increase output. The big business men of England are looking at the United States with watchful and wide open eyes, realizing that they must meet a new competitive force.

"England is a nation of shopkeepers. The shopkeepers will find it necessary to have prohibition. And they will have it."
Mr. Jones was unwilling to prophesy when they would have it, but phesy when they would have it, but placed his hope in some sudden transformation such as that in the United States.

Mr. Wilson also produced figures showing a steady increase in drunkenness. These figures are freely admitted by the wet reformers. Drunkenness is, if anything, more fiercely denounced by them. "I believe with Kingsley in the Englishman who can value his beer and be thankful for it with a good conscience."

when I spoke to Mr. Jones of this viewpoint, he first called to my attention that Admiral Hall was a director of a big brewing company and added:

and added:

"It really is beautiful—most beautiful. And all a pure waste of effort. The only thing wrong with the public house is drink. The admitted aim of these brewers is to encourage family drinking. The new public house is to be a place where wives and children go with their husbands and parents and the children get their first lessons in the consumption of alcohol. The only way to make public houses places for women and children is to take drink out of the public houses."

The public house reformers have

The public house reformers have been making an intensive campaign now for a year, but there are no signs of change in the public houses. The prohibitionists have been making an intensive campaign throughout the same period, but prospects of success are much dimmer now than a year ago. And England goes on drinking more intensively than ever.

The sum of prohibition which appeared to be rising in the west with William Jennings Bryan as its prophet really arose in the east under Mohammet; the wets of England look upon the American phenomenon as a sunset

Should no additional authorizations be made by any of the three great powers, and projected build-ing completed, the American fleet, by 1924, would be supreme in all elements. It would comprise more ships, of greater size and better fighting ability, and for the first time would out-rank Britain's. Here is how the capital ships vould compare: Total tonnage, United States, 1,-150.650: Great Britain, 883,290; Ja-

> Great Britain would lead in sec ond-class capital ships (those with guns under 14 inches). She would possess eighteen, or 395,840 tons, compared with eight in the Ameri can fleet totaling 167,500 tons; Japan would have but three, or 59,-950 tons. This superiority is, of course, offset in other directions.

It is possible that if Japan should carry out her famous "eight-eight" program, now before the diet, she would crowd Britannia for second place. This would put eight more battleships 'and eight more battle cruisers of the most formidable type under the Nipponese standard.

Austria and Germany, of course, were deprived of their fleets through defeat. Neither France nor Italy has put down a capital ship in the past six years. Aside from England, the rest of the maritime nations of the old world combined could not muster a dangerous fleet, South America, Asia and Africa, omitting Japan, are not to be reckoned in naval competition.

U. S. Has More Destroyers. In another way the American fleet is greatest. It possesses more lestroyers of latest design than all other nations of the world and has preponderance of man-power. The question of ordnance is open o dispute. The American 50-caliber naval guns have greater range and penertation than the 45-caliber British guns. But British experts claim this is discounted by their superior accuracy, a claim which is ot established.

The American 16-inch 50-caliber weapon is said to have no equal among navies of the world. It comwith the 15-inch 45-caliber British gun. By 1924 America will mount on sixteen capital ships, 152 of these guns, while Britain will have but 100. The advantage in weight of projectile, velocity, penerability and the preponderance in umbers thus rests with America.

In the case of Japan, secrecy surounds the possible construction of eight battleships and a like number of battle cruisers. These vessels would displace 40,000 tons, have speed of 35 knots and an armanent of from eight to twelve 16inch 50-callber guns. It is understood three of these craft, which would be the most powerful ever launched, are now being built for Japan in British yards.

Other Naval Needs. While the American navy is leading in capital ships, naval experts have told senators of needs rounding out in other directions. They vant light cruisers, aircraft carriers of high speed, ocean-going subma-

STRIKE AGAINST TAX

Middle Classes Plan Passive Resistance to Heavy Toll on ncomes.

BY FLETCHER ALLEN.

London, January 8.—The middle-class of Britain, the "Black Coated Brigade," is engineering a new form of protest against heavy taxation. They threaten a "tax strike" by passive resistance. They intend to take a vacation from paying income tax. Millions of tax suits is a prospect which the government will find hard to face.

Under the present rate of taxation the average middle-classer works about three months per annum for the government, sometimes it runs to four months. The tax varies between one-third and onefourth of the total income. undercurrent of dissatisfaction undercurrent of dissatisfaction grows apace.

In parliament members are asking pertinent and occasionally imperthent questions concerning governmental waste. The newspapers are making a "stunt" out of it in order to discredit an already much discredited government—and to increase circulation. The government promises to reduce the budget considerably for next year. The preliminary negotiations have been made. The chancellor of the exchequer, Austen Chamberlain, is being offered government promotion which is thinly disguised demotion. His successor at the exchequer is hinted at. There are three names before the people at present, Sir Robert Horne, who has done well at the board of trade, but who is not very acceptable to the magnates of the city of London, and being a lawyer is popularly discredited; Sir Worthington Evans, who has no antagonism in the city, and would probably do well enough, and the arch-spender of the government. Winston Churchill.

Churchill Favorite Winston Churchill is the favorite at the moment, and will possibly succeed to the office, if he wants it, and would be in position to cut expenditure also if he wanted to. For this reason it is suggested in influential circles that Winston Churchill he given a "safe" seat in this reason it is suggested in in-cliuential circles that Winston Churchill be given a "safe" seat in the next election, as he is by no means certain of return for his old constituency, Dundee, where he is being opposed by E. D. Morel as a being opposed by E. D. Morel as a labor candidate.

In view of the coming change the private members of the present parliament are busily dressing their windows and raising an anvil chorus against the waste of government money. They don't get very far, but their voice is heard a little more than it used to be. There is a solid body of opinion and strong protest behind them. The government must retrench or face the "strike." So the government says it will be content with a budget of $4.00,000,000 and the opnosition seeks to cut it by 500 t 1,000 mil-0,000,000,000 and the opposition will be opposited as the opposited as the opposite opposited as the opposite opposited as the opposite opposited as the opposite opposite opposited as the opposite opposite opposited as the opposite o

The middle-class is heavily hit by the high rate of income tax, and the government seems to be without even a sense of humor in collecting it. Under the English system the income tax is collected in two installments, which fall due immediately after Christmas and just before the summer vacation. A man with, say $6,000 per annum, a reasonably good salary in Britain, has to be content to present the government with $1.500 to $2,000 of that amount, according to the sources of income and the skill he shows in getting legal rebates. To Go to Courts.

To Go to Courts.

Rather than continue to pay so much, the black-coated brigade is going to give the government the impossible task of collecting the tax through the courts as they did in the case of the education acts. A large proportion of the middle-class will simply pay no attention to the government's demand for money, and the government will thereupon have to sue in the courts for payment. Of course, they will sue, but the government realizes

SAYS DEATH IS UNREAL

Proves That the Dead Still Live

Remarkable evidence that there is no death, there are no dead, is offered by Lloyd Kenyon Jones, room 981-U, 538 South Clark street, Chicago, in his book entitled "God's World," in which he shows how, through God's own law, the spirits of those who have passed through the portals of Death can and do communicate with those on earth. One should be cheered by the thought that loved ones have not been transmuted into cold, unemotional individualities by death, for God's door is always open between earth life and eternal life, where we all will be united forever. In his illustrated booklet, "Communication," he presents his view of life, here and beyond the grave, which will enable you to understand "God's World" and show you how to obtain happiness and a fuller understanding of life here and in the hereafter. In face of this threat, there is already a great change of ground. The prime minister pleads with the nation to give him a lead in economy. The banks have done it. The government is getting all the lead is wants in economy, and the consequent situation in Britain resembles an old-fashloned panic.

As a result of this pressure from the malcontents, the government is making experimental suggestions as to new taxation. One suggestion is that there shall be a tax of one penny in $5 on all business turnover, an interesting but difficult tax to collect. The probability is that the major tax will be a flat assessment of 10 per cent on all assessment of 10 per cent on all profits, which will be easy of collection and would operate with a degree of fairness. This tax, however, will not be collected from the professional classes; they will meet their obligations to the state through an adjustment of income tax which will cover their profita-ble and unprofitable years on a system of average.

The next day a shop in the Haymarket , one with the world-wide reputation for its raincoats, its conservatism' and its high prices, a shop which has its own factories for silk and wool materials, displayed a quantity of fine silk-both in the piece and made up into shirts, pajamas and women's wear, as well as men's and women's knitted wool garments and ready-to-wear suits, with large placards announcing that owing to the adverse foreign exchange these goods, which had been manufactured for the foreign market, were offered at half price for immediate disposal.

Nothing in the history of shopping could be more spectacular than the scenes inside that classic establishment. Instead of the dignified and formal proceeding which has always marked their dealings, the shop assistants, dressed in their usual beautiful uniforms made from fine goods specially woven by the store and cut by the most skillful tailors of the trade, were marshaling a most non-descript mob of men and women.

Flower girls from Piccadilly Circus, leaving their baskets in charge of the pompous, much be-medalled doorman, scrambled through the softly carpeted saloons, spending as they unwound.

Other shops in the West End have not so far reduced their prices; they contend that this stock of goods is limited and that as it is sold off figures will return, but in the meantime the public is demanding a reduction along il lines at the big department stores and in default of lower prices women refuse to buy. Foodstuffs are slightly lower, but only in the inferior grades. Four cents has been knocked off the price of the cheapest tea, which upon examination, is found to be largely dust. There is a glut of tea in the London docks at present and some of the big importers are selling ship loads of low-grade tea straight from the wharves by weight into the buyers' own receptacles.

Watch It Whirl

Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls—here is the continuous service system. It's a spinner. It whirls.

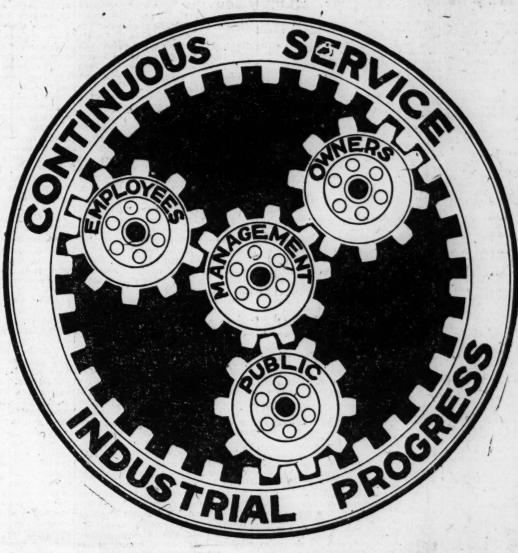

Clip it out and thrust a pin through its center into the wall. Then give it a whirl. You will see action.

You will see how the Georgia Railway & Power Company works.

The diagram is based on the planetary gear principle, one of the finest mechanical methods known. Each part shown is a factor that operates to produce public service.

They mesh together on cogs, spin in oil and pass on their power from one to another. They pull in unison for the public.

When you spin this wheel you will see the parts merge into one. You will see the entire group become a single object. Then you will find CONTINUOUS SERVICE and INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS leaping forth.

The Public Is The Most Important Pinion

This whirler tells the story or all public utility; but it is presented here particularly to tell the story of gas.

The pinions of Atlanta's gas service are slowing up. They need oil.

If one pinion should jerk or cease to revolve, it would bind and break the entire system. It would tear the cogs off the other pinions and leave them to spin around in the air without effect.

The public is the most important pinion of all. It is the public, which, by its consumption of gas, absorbs the efforts of the other three. It is the public which, through its elected representatives, the Railroad Commission, controls the speed and action of the rest. The public makes laws governing the entire gas service. Through its representatives the public fixes the rates, which is the oil of the service; and it pays the rates.

The Georgia Railway & Power Company has previously stated in these advertisements all the conditions under public control that are affecting the gas service.

It has presented letters from the people asserting their interest in the subject, and their willingness to help,

You have heard how the cost of operating the gas service has mounted out of all proportion to the revenue received. We have told you that due to these costs and the low rates, this company is losing $1,000 a day.

And we have shown you that Atlanta has better gas at lower rates than many other towns.

You are familiar also with the fact that equipment has got to be improved at the outlay of many thousands of dollars. The company hasn't the money to do this, and you know it cannot borrow money while it is

All the Georgia Railway & Power Company has ever asked, and all it is asking now is just rates; that is, rates that will pay a reasonable return on the fair value of the gas property used in the public service.

The public is the only pinion in the gas system that can adjust these rates.

If the public, with its own voice and through its own elected representatives, shall do its part, the other pinions will do theirs. Let the public give this system a new whirl. Let us see CONTINUOUS SERVICE grow big. Let us work toward INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

But that was their patriotism. This coolness of Atlanta audiences is commented on everywhere, for no one questions the appreciation here of music, yet expression is not given in outbursts of applause or "ovations" as they are given artists in other olaces. Smaller Occasions Of the Week.

Of the week.

Of the smaller occasions of the week assembling a small group of congenial women was the lunch given Thursday at the Capital City club, when Mrs. Silas W. Davis was hostess, and Mrs. Samuel Lumpkin, who has just returned from a visit to relatives in Virginia, was the guest of honor. The table decorations were in American Beauty roses and narcissi. The party went afterwards to the Howard for the afternoon performance.

Two luncheons on Friday assembling congenial parties of women were those at which Mrs. Robert F. laddox was hostess and Mrs W. W.

Announcement of the engagement Announcement of the engagement of Miss Helen McCarty, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Dixon McCarty, to Dr. Dan Collier Elkin, will be of general social interest in Georgia and Kentucky, Dr. Elkin being a native of Lancaster. Ky., but now a resident of Atlanta.

Miss McCarty has been a distinctly charming figure in social life since she made her debut under bright auspices. She is pretty and lovable and has the social attributes which have won for her a general admiration and a large circle of warm friends.

She was one of the group of patriotic Atlanta women who devoted themselves to Red Cross work during the period of the war, especially in the Red Cross.

Applause was not vociferous, but determined and continuous, and the audience remained until the artist returned, and the applause was repeated in the same determined spirit. Margaret Streeter, representative of the bureau of education at Washington, in a talk on the appreciation of music. The meeting will be held in the annex of the Ponce de Leon Baptist church, and will begin at 11 o'clock.

Miss Streeter has postponed her departure from the clty in order that she might appear before the club and outline to the members the scope and character of her work. The club, which is working along the same lines as Miss Streeter for the musical aducation of Atlanta is delighted at the opportunity of hearing of the nation-wide ampaign which is being waged.

The speaker was formerly supervisor of music in the schools of Los Angeles, and for this reason she has been asked to outline in detail the work in music which is being done in the schools of the southern California metropolis in order that helpful suggestions might be received which may be applied in this city.

Message From President General

We are beginning a new year of opportunity. In this new year I want to emphasize the national character of our society and its work. The power, the value and the influence of the national society all depend upon keeping the national idea uppermost. Our chapters are merely groups of national society members banded together "for purposes of convenience" to do our national society's work and advance its objects in the various localities where they are formed. The chapters are valuable working units of our national organization; they are themselves the national society working in groups. They may take up purely state or local objects which are in keeping with the general patriotic objects of the scciety "in the drawing room Miss Anna" in the drawing room Miss Anna "in the drawing room Miss Anna" in the drawing room Miss Anna "in the drawing room Miss Anna" in the drawing room Miss Anna work. The power, the value and the influence of the national sosociety members banded together "for purposes of convenience" to do eral patriotic objects of the scciety -but these are secondary. The first duty of every chapter is to do its share in the national work of the organization, undertaken by vote of the state and chapter representa-tives in our congress or on the national board.

It is this national scope of our work which brings us the recognition we receive from our government, from the public at large and from other organizations which are constantly seeking our endorsement or co-operation. It is the national or co-operation. It is the national character of our patriotic serving which entitled us to receive our charter from the United States government, under which we are obliged to report annually to the United States. It is this national character by reason of which we enjoy exemption of our property from all taxation, and of our enter-tainments from war taxation of their proceeds—for they are exempt by a ruling of the federal authorities on the ground of our educational objects.

What are the big national things we have done in the past and must

From the scrap book of one of Columbus' most representative women comes the following account of a D. A. R. assembly held at the colonial home of the Misses Benning, on upper Broad street. The Misses Benning have always been prominent in patriotic work (a splendid trait which perhaps they inherited from their parents, their father, General Henry L. Benning being one of the foremost figures of the civil war).

In view of the fact that Camp ing the box which held the entrance fee to be devoted to the building of the Continental Hall in Washington city.

"In the drawing room Miss Anna Benning, assisted by Mrs. E. P. Dismukes, regent of the George Walton chapter, and a large number of representative members of Ogletthore chapter, received their guests. The soft light of innumerable candles shed their becoming radiance on a distinguished company. No less a person than Mrs. Sarah Porter Hillhouse was present in the guise of her great granddaughter, Mrs. Woodle Shepherd Thweatt. The dead old lady's cap and shoulder square of bobinet, with squarerimmed spectacles, the lenses out, just as Mrs. Hillhouse and her contemporaries wore them, proved most becoming.

"The tea table was resplendent with the heavy old-time tea service that is now a rare possession—salvers, urns, bowls and cream jugs as our great-grandmothers called them, elicited everybody's admiration. Mrs. Frank M. Frederick, presiding at this table, was notably handsome in powdered hair and dainty fichu, and Miss Georgia Mustian Wilkins, her co-adjutor, made a charming picture in a quaint old gown with narrow skirt and short bodice in the style of many a year ago. She wore a miniature of her great-grandmothers' sister at her throat.

"A plate with some of the good things of the present time was, handed each guest and a refreshing cup of either tea or coffee accompanied it. The old-fashioned touch here was represented by a bit of ginger preserve. Who has ever seen a genuine gentleman or lady of the old school who did not eat ginger preserve?"

Good Form, Health and Beauty

SEEK GRACEFULNESS ON TIPTOE!

BY MRS. HENRY SYMES

OULDST be graceful? Then take a lesson from the balletdancers, for they are the embodiment of grace. Of course, we do not mean that all women to be graceful must be ballet-dancers. That would be an absurd statement. simply mean that you should adapt of their tip-toeing exercises to your own needs.

An eminent professor asserts that the practice of exercises of this kind for a few minutes each day will not only im-prove one's health and beauty but it will lengthen one's life as well. X-ray experiments show that balancing on the toes will straighten out the spine. That they will help to ward off tuberculosis is a well-known fact, for when one is walking on tip-toes, the lungs work 17 per cent better than when one walks in the normal manner.

Whether or not you accept all the benefits claimed for the tip-toeing exercises is immaterial. The fact remains that these exercises will tend to increase one's height and will improve one's carriage. Anything which does, that is well worth the effort.

And the exercises are an effort in the true sense of the word. If you think the method looks too easy to be effecrive, just try the exercises and see for yourself how really difficult they are. Unless you are used to balancing stunts, you will find it almost impossible to attain the positions illustrated in the pictures. Do not become discouraged? however. Persevere and soon you will he rewarded by being able to take and hold the most difficult position with lit-take the easiest one first. That is number one in the series. In this position the arms and the right leg are extended while the body is balanced on the toes of the left foot. Be sure that the right leg is extended parallel with the right Practice holding this position for a minute at a time. Reverse and balance yourself on the toes of the right foot extending the left arm and left leg in parallel lines.

The second exercise looks very simple, but is in reality quite difficult. To ettain this position, one first extends the arms high above the head and then rises on the toes. From this position, bend slowing backward as far as possible. Keep your balance on the toes all the while. It might be well to practice this at first standing near a wall. This will Try These Over in Your Boudoir and give you an opportunity to catch your self in case there is danger of your When You Can falling over backward. The last exercise, or rather some-thing similar to it, you will probably have tried. The trick consists in keep-ing your balance on the toes of one foot Do Them, Emerge and Be Called Graceful! while you are holding the other foot Do not become discouraged even tho at first you are as wobbly as the fam-mous "Ugly Duckling." To Keep the Hair in Curl Q. My hair is very straight and thin. Because it is so straight, I have great difficulty in arranging it. I curl it, of course, but the curl will not stay in any length of time. What shall I do?-

The curling fluid printed below, will help your hair to retain, for a longer time, the artificial curl which you give it. Put this fluid on your hair before putting it up at night.

Gifts for Men

Q. Will you kindly suggest some gifts appropriate to give to young men?-La Rue.

A. A young girl's gift to a man a very impersonal one. No gift should be given to a mere acquaintance. It is entirely a matter of taste whether both given names or only one ere used in the signature. The name of a young girl is usually smaller than that of a married woman and is engraved in full, as "Miss Mary Douglas Jones." Romance & Beauty Prize Winner the $50.000000 Widower -How the Lovely, Modern Helen McMahon,

Adjudged "the Most Typical American Girl" in a Newspaper Contest, Captured America's Richest Widower James Cox Brady After

a Courtship That Began in New York's Latin Quarter

DISTINGUISHED couple have been married with the pomp and splendor of high aristocracy in Westminster Cathedral of London. Westminster is one of the most august of ecclesiastical edifices. It is a magnificent old Gothic pile over with centuries of royal distinction have run, in which baptisms, weddings and funerals of the high and the great have been celebrated with replendent formalism for many generations. The couple recently wedded in this exalted place of worship are distinguished folk, Americans without crowns or feudal insignia, to be sure, but Americans who stand high-high in money, high in prestige.

The man is James Cox Brady, multimillionaire, society man and familiar of the nobility of Europe. The woman is a great beauty, Helen McMahon, wealthy herself and winner of a notable beauty contest a few years ago in which she was pronounced by a jury of prominent American artists: "The most characteristic American beauty."

This, then, is an important marriage that was celebrated in Westminster Cathedral. Where did the romance, thus climaxed, begin? Where did this distinguished couple find each other? They found each other in Greenwich Village. They met and held courtship in the freakish bohemian haunts of New York's art crowd in Greenwich Village. Romance beginning in a bohemian resort and clmaxing in Westminster Cathedral is an odd spectacle. It was an odd ro-

Greenwich Village is a queer place, the remains of a one-time quarter of the aristocratic and the rich now standing on the fringe of slums. It first underwent the usual fate of rundown swell sections. Business moved uptown. The slums expanded toward uptown. The high class residential quarter fled uptown. Its abandoned mansions awaited the slum dweller or the wrecking crew and rented for a stanza of a song. They stood on Washington Square Park. This and low rents attracted artists. The quarter became known as an artists' colony. It gained prestige. The artistic and the ..ear artistic broke their necks moving in. Rents went to the sky and the quarter was preserved. Studios, æsthetic tearooms and all sorts of resorts grew all around to care for the "artists" and for the throngs of uptown people who wanted a glimpse of the free mad life of

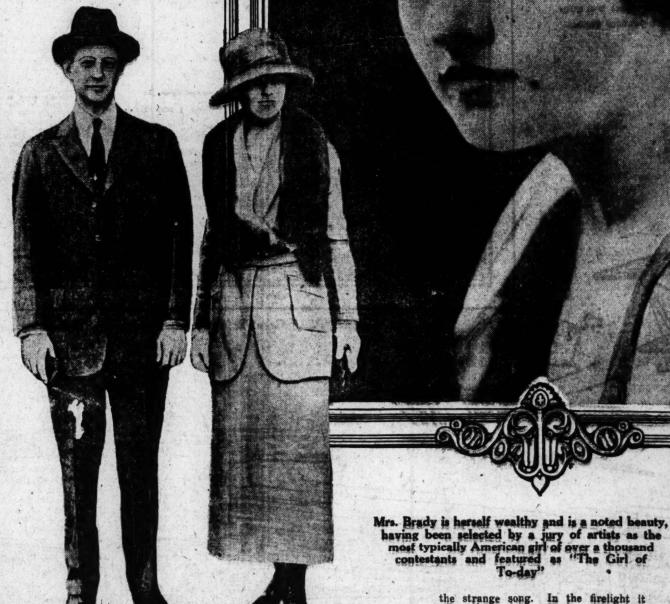

The regular frequenters of Greenwich Village are a strange crowd of dabblers with paint and ink, of looms and charlatans. The most conspicuous characteristic about them is that they are endlessly impecunious, or appear to be. Even those who have money bear the ophemian air of being broke all the time. Nobody would suspect that there were millionaires among them. And yet there are. That is one of the points made by the case of the couple who met in Greenwich Village and were married in Westminster Cathedral. They were fellows of the village, scribblers and lauders. They were high and mighty people and are described as follows:

The late Anthony N. Brady was one of the notable financiers of his time. He flourished in the famous day for great capitalists, the day of Fiske, Gould and Vanderbilt. He was a prominent person in every way and when he died he left a fortune of $70,000,000. His son, James Cox Brady, was named the executor of the estate and succeeded to the honors of his father.

This heir of a splendid fortune lived the life of a man of influence and wealth Misfortune, though, did not avoid him. He married Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, of Albany, N. Y., a young lady of a first rate family. Three children were born to them. Mrs. Brady was killed in 1912 in one of those New Haven Railroad wrecks which were occurring with appalling regularity in those days. Some time afterward Brady married

One night a studio party was held by one of the well known artists of the quarter. It was a bizarre affair. The wide room, which was furnished in weird designs in white and black stripes varying with exotic batiks and futuristic paintings, held a company of merry bo-hemian guests. Among them was a short, squat, flat-faced, long-haired Russian, who looked as though he should have been riding a half wild pony on the steppes of Turkestan. He had a queer Russian guitar in his hand. A merry fire was burning in the fireplace. Russian squatted on a soft, thick rug before it and began tuning his

"Let's have a little atmosphere," mebody cried, and turned out a light. In a flash the room was in darkness save for the wavering gleam of the flame in the fireplace and a flood of white moonlight that streamed through two high windows at one side. The Russian began to sing a wild Tartar love

At this juncture a late arrival came in. He took off his overcoat, threw it familiarly on a divan and, with a friendly monosyllable to the host and several of the guests whom he knew, took his place, making as little disturbance as possible, among the circle listening to the strange song. In the firelight it was to be seen that he was a handsome man in middle life, a man in whose face lay security, power and pride. He stood and listened to the moody exotic singing of the Russian and peered into the fire for a while. Then his eyes wandered and were caught. He saw a white screen standing with the moonlight streaming full on it. In the middle of the screen was a silhouette of the inkiest black. It was the profile of a young woman.

The silhquette was of exquisite beauty.

It was defined with the most refined detail. It was of pure Grecian contour, and even with the austerity and retipearly luminous moonlight on the acreen itt held an exceedingly sweetness. The man stood and stared at the heautiful silhouette and fell into a trance. When the song was done the silhouette moved.

The man saw a dark figure between the screen and the moonlight. Chance had placed her in such a posture that as she had sat and listened the gleaming flood of luminescence had shadowed her profile on the screen, had shadowed it

The Russian began another song, this

"Several years ago one of the big New York dailies held a beauty competition. Photographs of candidates were to be mailed in. The girl there was living a usual girl's life with her parents in Brooklyn. They are well off. She saw the advertisement of the contest. She knew she was pretty. In a whim of pride she mailed her photograph and entered herself as a candidate. This unknown to anybody. A jury of seven prominent artists headed by Harrisen Fisher gave her the prize. Since then she has posed for pictures on and off. She is so beautiful that pictures of her are in demand for magazine covers. Her good fortune, though, has not turned her head. She lives quietly with her people, goes in for athletics and sports and comes down to the village at regular intervals."

"Look how the moonlight shadows her head on the screen. That silhouette is the most beautiful thing that I have ever seen." The man enraptured of the shadow was becoming lyrical.

"It is very fine," assented the host. "I suppose, though," was the retort, "that the beauty is all in the shadow. To see her in the light will spoil it. Then she will not be beautiful."

The host was admiring the shadow on the screen. The Russian stopped singing. The host went to the girl.

"Sit still like that for a minute," he said to her. She obeyed wonderingly "Look!" he cried to the company. They exclaimed in surprise and admiration. When the girl saw what it was all about she sprang to her feet with a laugh. She pushed a button and turned on the lights. The man who had fallen in love with the shadow gasped.

NEW HORRORS OF NEXT AIR WAR

Great Britain Fast Developing Her Air Forces With New Inventions and Greater Air Fleet—Is America's First Line Defense to Be a Great Air Force or Sea Fleet?

N EW horrors are promised in air combat if there is ever another great war, and who can promise that there will not be? Since the end of the war with Germany there have been developments in airplane inventions which indicate that future wars will be won by the nations that control the air.

The British have been especially active. This was demonstrated during the aerial pageant in aid of the Royal Air Force Memorial Fund, which took place at Hendon aerodrome, near London, in July. It is estimated that quite 50,000 people were present in the inclosures, while another vast concourse of many thousands watched the flying from the surrounding country.

There were exciting aerial encounters, won-derful formation flying, and air racing; a kite balloon was shot down during the afternoon by Flight-Lieut. T. F. Hazell, D. S. O., M. C., D. F. C., who during the war destroyed thirty-four German aeroplanes and sixteen German balloons.

Attack on Trench.

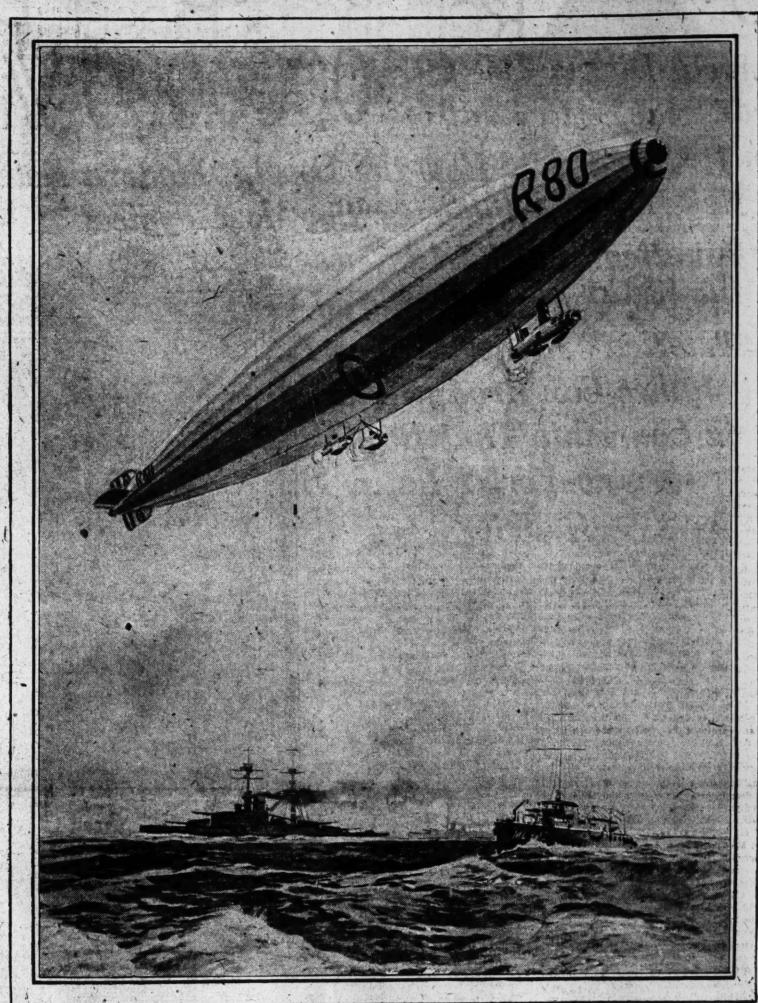

One of the most realistic episodes in the programme, however, was the attack on a trench by a formation of Bristol fighters, which came swooping down upon the position dug in the middle of the aerodrome. First came the prelude—a rattle of machine-gun fire as the machines rushed in to attack—and next moment the biplanes had released their bombs with deadly accuracy.

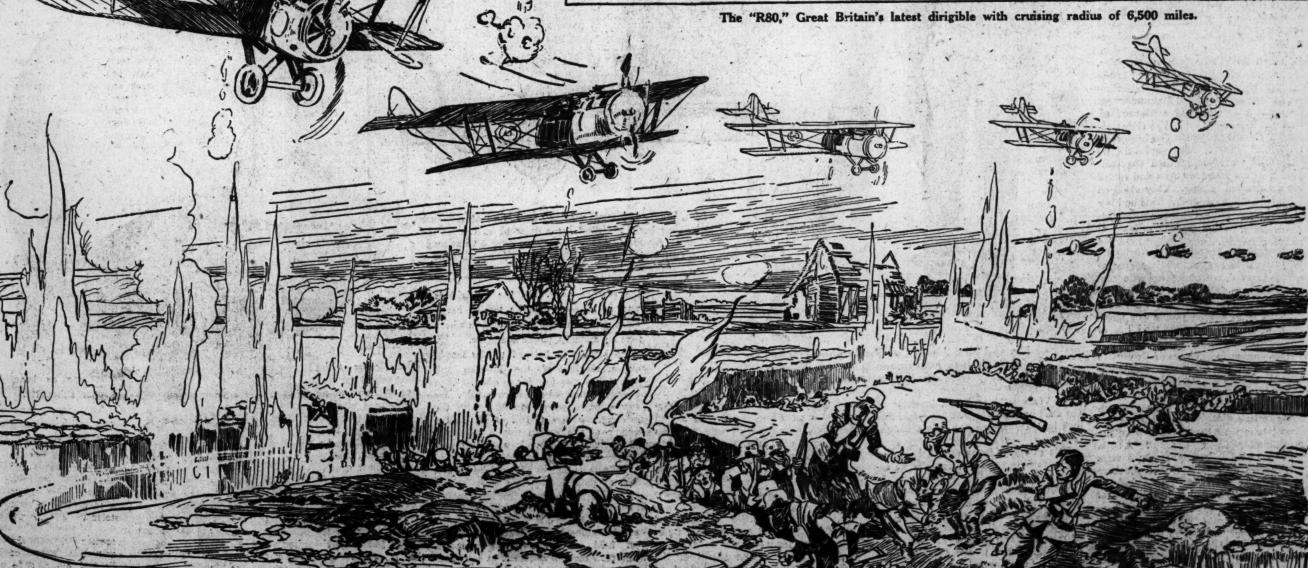

As they swooped away the whole trench leaped upward in a sheet of flame, surmounted by a rolling cloud of black smoke, which brought home to thousands one of the grimmer realities of war and the deadliness of the modern aeroplane in attacking infantry.

Also the British have been active in developing the airship. The "R 80," which has just been launched from Vicker's Walney Island sheds, has been designed for long cruises over the sea and great endurance. She is 530 feet in length, with a beam of 70 feet and is 80 feet in height; her gross gas capacity is 1,250,000 cubic feet, as compared with the 2,000,000 cubic feet of the "R 33" and "R 34." The vessel is, however, built entirely of duraluminum, the special alloy made by Vickers, and has a decided streamline shape of hull and cars; the four Wolseley-Maybach engines, each of 230 h. p., will give the "R 80" a speed of sixty-five miles per hour for a distance of 4,000 miles; or, at a cruising speed of fifty miles per hour, a distance of 6.500 miles.

The vessel, despite her smaller cubic capacity, is expected to do as much as the bigger "R 34." which, it will be remembered, made the double crossing of the Atlantic last year. Her useful lift (for crew, fuel, water, ballast, &c.) is 17 1-2 tons.

Communication between the cars on this air monster is afforded by a gangway which runs from end to end; on top of the vessel is a gunplatform designed to carry two-pounder guns.

Should A Church Countenance Nude Statuary?

Lively Discussion Over the Placing of "the Little Lady of the Dew" in the Yard of St. Mark's, New York-Why Not the Nude in Art, Asks Taft the Sculptor, When You Can See the Real Thing at Any Cabaret?

THE unveiling of three statues, including a nude called "The Little Lady of the Dew," during the celebration of the 125th anniversary of little old St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerieformerly the private chapel of Petrus Stuyvesant, Captain General and Governor in Chief when New York was Dutch territory in the seventeenth century—has caused a furor in ecclesiastical and artistic circles.

Secluded under the portico of the quaint old church now stand two gigantic figures, "Aspiration" and "Inspiration," modeled by Scion Borglum, brother of the well known sculptor, Gutzon Borglum. No one can deny that "Aspiration" and "Inspiration" are fitting subjects for church sculpture, but criticism has been launched against Mr Bor-glum's in erpretation. He has chosen Indian figures, nine feet tall and modeled in the rough, ungainly fashion of the present day, because he felt that the Indian represents the only unhyphenated American and because he believes that in the savage, the primitive man, is the source of aspiration and inspiration.

In "The Little Lady of the Dew," set in a deep niche at the western side of the churchyard, he has portrayed innocence, chastity and beauty-virtues which should not be barred from any churchyard. This kneeling figure of maidenly virtue is done in the smooth, flowing lines of classic sculpture, and was completed several years ago before Mr. Borglum's soul was tried in the crucible of the World War.

The Rev. John Roach Straton, who has achieved considerable publicity through his vice crusades in the cabarets and in exposing the "night life" of New York, has declared that he can see no reason for putting pagan nude statues in a churchyard, even if he did believe in the nude in art-which he does not.

The noted sculptor, Lorado Taft, of Chicago, damned the nude in art by faint praise the other day. When asked if such figures in the nuce would not prove harmful to the youth of our country he replied:

"How can such figures hurt youth, when there are cabarets on almost every corner where much of the anatomy in real flesh can be seen?"

A minister from Detroit who saw the latest acquisition of St. Mark's clearly expressed his condemnation. "Our whole Protestant religion," he said, "has endeavored to shut out the emotional and sensual. We rebelled from the ornate architecture, the dramatic and sensual in music, in sculpture and decorative painting, from the incense and chanting of the Romanist ritual. We have worshiped the Almighty in plain, bare edifices. "At the time of the Renaissance in Italy, when the Church inspired the greatest in the art and literature of that time, what happened? More and more liberties were taken. The pagan Greek and Roman arts were revived and the churches became the resting places for all that was decadent in art. Then followed the decline in the Renaissance and the terrible, elaborate and grotesque Baroque period arrived. This expressed seness of the morals of the people. In the Church of Maria Vittoria in Rome is the recumbent figure of Santa Theresa of that period, which is the grossest insult to the Christian faith. Reclining on a draped couch, the half-clothed figure of this female saint is represented as receiving a visitation from the Lord. Her face and figure represent ecstasy, but it is the most passionate and sensual sculpture imaginable. is that what St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie is coming to?"

"Our inheritance, on the one hand, of obsolescent theologies and legalistic conceptions of religion so hostile to the art spirit-and so strongly defended by the ecclesiastical gentleman from Detroitand, on the other hand, our tremendous preoccupation with economic problems appear to have brought about a complete divorce of the artists and the Church. This is entirely wrong. If the Church has a message to convey, to the future as well as to the present, it is the artist she chiefly needs. The hero and the saint must be sung and portrayed to be remembered and no scientific embalmer will supplant the poet, the sculptor and the painter.

"Similarly, the artist, if he is to fight with success for his spiritual freedom, for the right, and sing and paint and chisel at the bidding of the Muse and can imagine his righteous indignation not at the command of buyers and sellers years of service at St. Mark's-in-the-

A polyglot population has surrounded the corner, but despite the vandalism and the encroachment of the slums, Dr. Guthrie has planted flowers and shrubs and restored the church and its yard to their former beauty. St. Mark's in the Bouwerie is located at the corner of Second Avenue and Tenth Street. Because the checkerourd system of streets was installed many years after the streets of Petrus Stuyvesant's Bouwerie Village had been laid out, St. Mark's Church directly faces he intersection of the streets.

In 1647, when Petrus Stuyvesant arrived as the last in line of the Dutch

I! Makes a Difference Which You Hitch Your Wagon To, and Sometimes It's a Pleasure When One Kicks Over the Traces.

T was because he was not afraid of her that John Seiden was attracted by Beatrice Ross in the beginning. Selden car ried diffidence to an absurd length. He was abominably shy. Self-conscious at best, he really suffered when girls noticed him. He saw mockery in their eyes when they regarded him: he heard sepre in their laughter: was sure, always, that their laughter was directed at him. And it was just because his need of triendship, of empanionship, was so great; because women, in his eyes, occupied so high and sacred a place, that they were able by their meekery, to hurt him so keenly.

He had some reason for thinking they were laughing at him. He was very tall and loosely built, and he stooped a little, as many tall men do. He never knew what to do with his hands, and his near sighted eyes were al ways making him stumble and trip. If you looked at him closely you saw keep eyes be hind his glasses: shrewdness and a hint of humor about his mouth; strength in his jaw and chin; a fine sort of sensitiveness in all his features.

But girls like those whe thronged the building in which he worked were not given to probing beneath appearances. They saw in Selden a man painfully lacking in assurance: ungainly: affecting an indifference to them their instinct told them he did not feel. They saw that he was afraid of them. Some of those girls, and Beatrice Ross among them. knew that he was regarded as a coming man: that the great telephone organization had brought him to New York because of his skill in solving the problems arising in a congested district like lower New York, where one build ing may use as many telephones as some small cities. But most of them never thought of him except when they happened to see him, and then they were amused, and a little scornful.

He grew conscious of Beatrice Ross rather slowly. She was Markham's secretary, and he had to see Markham often. He had to wait outside his door, sometimes, and when that happened he would be alone with her, and from time to time, too, she came to his room, with reports or papers.

Her eyes, as he met them, were always kind. Perhaps the first real thought he had about her was that he didn't mind turning his back to her: that he was not a aid that she would laugh at him as soon as he did so. In the corridors he was always coming upon little groups of girls. He could hear them giggling a long way off; then, as he neared them, the giggling would be hushed, and they would all look at him. They gained boldness from one another; half a dozen girls. together, would stare him out of countepass him with downcast eyes

He hated having to pass one of these groups. His cheeks grew red; his back stiffened. He had to make the same sort of effort that is called for from a man who, wearing a silk hat, must walk by a group of

That he never saw Beatrice Ross in one of those giggling groups may have been due to chance; certainly she did not hold herself aloof from the other girls. Yet he felt that she was not like them, and, by slow degrees. her figure worked itself into the tissue of the dreams that helped to make his lonely

Save for the year during which he had lived with Osklson Selden's life in New York had been solitary to an extraordinary degree. He and Oskison, mutually abhorrent of the boarding house in which they met, had pooled their resources and taken a floor in where rents were low. He had enjoyed his intimacy with Oskison for a year, then Oskison had married and gone off to live in a suburb. Selden had kept the place; the thought of another boarding house experi-

Yet he was not misanthropic. It was only his shyness that shut him away from the life that cried out to him. He longed for companionship: envied Oskison, profoundly, his ease, his faculty for making friends. He wanted to know women, to enjoy their friendship, as men like Oskison did. And he had dreams of marriage, too, and a real home; Those girls, seeing through the pretense of his indifference to them, were right. He dreamed of a girl who should never mock him, with look or laugh. . . .

Oskison, when he lived with Selden, tried to conquer that shyness of his, and falled. into his own vivid life. But, though he could lead his friend to water, he could by no means make him drink.

Now Beatrice Ross stirred him, touched him. She had a rival, a predecessor; there was another figure, vague, impalpable, in Selden's dream life. But all the advantage was hers. For he saw her every day; her living presence was a part of his life. He never suspected it, but many of those giggling girls he hated would have been willing to fill the place Beatrice was coming to hold in his mind; his aloofness interested them. and almost any one of them might have touched him, as she had done. They lacked the wit to divine the way, that was all. That that could help her to fulfill her purpose.

In her. as in Selden, nature was at work. For her the office was only a means to an end. She dreamed of ease, security, a home in which she should be mistress. a man bent to her will, providing for her. In Selden she saw such a man. She knew what Markham thought of him and his future; knew she could count upon his prospects. Lave?

Did she think of that? But what was love, save marriage with a man one could depend upon, a safe man, sound, and with Selden's advances were timid. reluctant. hesitating. They fell into speech during those times when he had to wait for Markham And then, one day, he asked her to lunchand, for the next two weeks, avoided her as much as he could. Later she began to talk of a play that was being much discussed and that she had not seen. Suggestion worked upon him; one night they dined together and saw the play. And that was the beginning of intimacy. He met her quite often. After that, as he was leaving the building, it was natural enough that they should go uptown

More and more that vague figure of his dreams, assumed her form; the woman he should love, the mother of the children for which he longed. And yet, when he was with her, when some strong part of him urged him to take her in his arms, to hold her, possess her, an instinct checked him

Doubts assailed him always just when he was most certain that he loved her. It was not Beatrice he saw, then, the living, tangible Beatrice, but the figure of his dream. in her image. And in such moments, as he tried to give it fixity, it lost her semblance. Blue eyes were changed to brown, light hair to dark. For her substance a phantom of his memory was exchanged, tormenting him. maddening him, filling him with an impotent anger against his folly.

There was a hot night in the early summer when they rode long and far upon a bus top. They sat close, silent, worn out, their haze the day's heat had left; the mist dimmed the reflection of the lights upon the water. He felt the yielding of her body as it pressed against his own, the soft surrender of her hand, stealing into his. He had only to put his arm about her, draw her to him . . . her lips awaited his touch. For all his shy-

Yet he waited. Her eyes were wide, later, as he stood with her at her door. Her hand was in his; her lips were parted; she drooped a' little; swayed toward him. He cried gut: uttered a hoarse, choked sound; caught her to him. His lips were over hers. And then. as she threw back her head, he broke away from her, almost pushed her from him. He could remember, afterward, what he had said: "Good-night. Beatrice. My head aches-

While she had been in his arms, yielding to him, she had assumed another form. The eyes of his spirit had seen another woman in her place, and he had receiled, as from a sacrilese. Sacrilese it would have been. indeed, to touch that other weman's lips while he was moved as Beatrice had moved him: while the passion she had roused was

Yet. later, in the hot darkness of his room. it was for Beatrice he longed: for herself. not the creature in her image who moved through his dream.

He roused himself; sat up in bed; stared into the darkness. How great fool he was! What stood between him and what Beatrice offered him? The memory-of a memory! It was no more. He had not even the shadow of reality to build upon. A girl be had met once; slim, tall, dark haired, brown eyed; a sirl, kindly, gracious. . . .

Once he had seen her. But he remembered He had come home unexpectedly that night and found the house full of Oskison's friends. She had tried to teach him to dance: she had laughed with him, not at him. Oskison, amused, touched, perhaps, by his interest in her, had given him the chance to take her home. They had set out to walk through the long clew ride.

The memory of that talk was with him yet. They had spoken of books, and music. and great paintings. Lightly she had covered to him things unsuspected; he had been finding treasures of beauty ever since that night. He hagan to tell her things about his secret thoughts. . . They came to has stood between them. Yet she had asked him Marian Worth had not changed. After all, though, It was not so long. Less than three years.

He could remember Oskison, rallying at him, laughing at him, next day. And how Oskison, growing serious at something he saw in his eyes, had urged him not to fear

"Don't be a fool, Jack," he said. "You're fit to tell any girl alive you love her-if you do. And it's only in books that people let meney and the lack of it mess up their lives. Remember Emerson? 'Hitch your wagon to a star'? Suppose she's your star? Find

He had tried to silence Oskison by scoffing. "Old Emerson knew what he was talking about," said Oskison, ignoring him. "That's the best sort of advice. But-Lord-who takes it? It's hard to catch your star and bridle it. And so we take old Dobbin. He's always there, waiting to be harnessed, glad

He was remembering things that had not been in his mind for months. Strange the way this new longing for Beatrice evoked such memories! Beatrice . . . yes, now there was Beatrice. He could hitch his wagon to her star. Oskison had not thought of that. There might be stars and stars. It needn't be a choice between Dobbin and the

He was with Beatrice again a week later. Again it was hot, and after dinner they walked over to the park and found a slope. alone. The murmur of other voices came to them, but none was near. She stole within the shelter of his arm. Her head sank down upon his shoulder. He stirred; drew away from her a little.

"I'm so tired!" she said, and sighed His arm tightened a little about her; he answered the appeal of her weariness. She needed him, as he needed her. In that moment everything about her that was beautiful and fine was uppermost in his mind. She offered him herself-and it was so great a thing. . . . Love, tenderness, an end of loneliness and doubt. . . . She stirred in his arm; he looked down, and saw her face, upturned; her drooping lips. He hent swiftly, and their lips met. Her arm stole up; drew his head down.

Later, much later, a long sigh shook her. She lifted timid, trusting eyes to meet his troubled look.

"Jack," she said. "Jack-dear-" He kissed her again. But she must speak

"Jack, I suppose we'd better not tell anyone-right away."

She waited. He said nothing. "That we're engaged "

She could not read his eyes. For just a moment it was in his mind to break away. from her. He had not spoken; he was not bound. It was in his power, still, to free himself. But then he crushed her in his arms; he kissed her hungrily.

"I suppose not--" He answered her at last. "But-O-not now-don't talk about She was guiet, for a space, yielding her lips to his. But soon she spoke again. "If we have to wait, let's not tell any one until just before we can be married. People talk so about a long engagement......"

He shrank from such talk. But she was content. His silence did not trouble her. In her eyes there was a new look. He did not mark it. To him, too, content had come. with his surrender. New depths in him were stirred. He looked upon her with the pride of achievement in his eyes. It was as if his copquest of her had set him in his place among men. He was like a knight who had newly gained his spurs.

For a time he was happier than he had ever been. It was very wonderful to know that she was his. She filled his mind, as her had tortured him departed. He lived in and for the moment, idyllic, satisfying.

After a little time Beatrice stirred; she began to press him, gently, with her questions. He had things to tell her; a tale of debts he had assumed after his father's death, which had followed a long and costly illness; of other debts, contracted to pay his college expenses. He was nearly free. But she was not quite satisfied

"They couldn't have made you pay those debts of your father's, Jack, could they?'

He admitted that. But she must understand; his honor was involved.

"O yes, perhaps," she said. "But it didn't matter when you paid them. You needn't deprive yourself of things. You could wait until you could spare the money

He was stiff about that, though; they stopped talking about it. But, if she abandoned a direct assault, she was by no means done. Already, she began to let him know, there was talk about them. Their secret, so far as the office was concerned, was an open one. She was a little scornful when he betrayed his surprise.

"They've seen us together, silly," she said. " Madge Johnson was at Rockaway that day. Tilly Jones saw us at the theater. And Effic was having dinner at that French place last night. Can't you see they'd all be

He cut down some of his wn expenses; tried to make up, as best he could, for the extravagance of its purchase. But, before long, Beatrice spoke again of the way the girls were talking. They were

He stared at her, in speechless veration She was not stupid; he knew that. Why wouldn't she understand? Couldn't she see the way she was pushing him into one unwarranted expenditure after another for the sake of appearances?

"You don't know how girls talk in an office like this!" she said. She too, was angry; she convicted him, too, of an almost criminal lack of understanding. "It wouldn't be much worse if I kept on working after we were married-and you know what people say when a girl does that-what they think of her husband!"

"But Bee-look here-what difference does it make what a lot of silly girls say?" he asked. "I've tried to explain things to you. I've been paying old debts except for that I'd have some money saved by now. I'll be clear pretty soon. But we've got to get ahead-we can't spend everything we have, right at the start. I don't care what people say."

"Well, I do," she said, hotly. "So does every one. I bet you do yourself, really."

He shook his head, rather hopelessly. Beatrice was soft; she was yielding. Yet he was conscious of the curiously inflexible quality of her will. She had a way of concentrating her desire upon some object, insignificant in itself, perhaps. And no matter what obstacles stood in her way, she achieved her purpose. He had a prevision that it would be so in this case; that she would choose their home. And he was re-

Beatrice, indeed, was beginning to wear upon his nerves, in a multitude of little ways. She insisted on showing him off to her family. There were frightful, stiff dinners in the apartment where she lived with her mother and aunt. Those two never that they had once had money; that they fate had now reduced them. Beatrice, he gathered, was to retrieve the family's lost prestige. There was agitated talk, already. about the wedding; about Beatrice's gown. her flowers, the number of her attendants, the reception. It must be a grand affair, with notices in the newspapers.

Selden loathed the thought of display at a wedding, and said so. Mrs. Ross chose to think he was afraid of the expense; she said, stiffly, that, no matter what sacrifice might be involved, her child should always be able to remember her wedding with pride. He had to disclaim a parsimonious motive. hastily.

He hated Beatrice's relatives. They made jokes that seemed to him to be in the most questionable taste; they asked him questions appallingly personal. They told him stories about her childhood; brought him, triumphantly, baby pictures of her. O, of course, if he had been in love with her ! Or even had he known that he was not . . .

He was curiously surprised to find, some how, that the date of the wedding had been fixed, almost without his knowledge. He had been pushed to that, an inch at a time. as it were. He was about at the end of his tether when Jim Oskisan asked him out for a week end. Beatrice was resentful; she had been planning to exhibit him to still more relatives on Sunday. But he stood firm, for once. And Beatrice, who knew all about the Oskisons, considered the social value of their friendship and gave in.

He met Oskison at the station on Friday afternoon; he had decided to stay away from the office on Saturday morning.

"Lord it's good to see you again, Jack." said Oskison. "That's the worst of living out of town-you don't see the people you like best. We've got two of you for this week end, though. You remember Marian Worth, preventable, yet suicides are ascribed to conditions over which apparently nothing less than the Almighty has control," said Dr. Davis. "All acoldental deaths cannot be prevented as long as floods and storms are no better understood than at present. so long as man's nature partakes of the human. But the conditions leading to and the instruments used in producing such deaths may be taken from the people and in this way the number reduced."

Of the 25,253 deaths recorded by the state bureau of vital statistics during the first three quarters of 1920, one out of every 16 was due to some cause other than disease, one in 23 was due to some accident, one in 65 was a homicide and one in 290 a suicide. This waste of human life is realized when it is remembered that in every 100,000 people in Georgia there are 4 suicides, that 17 are murdered and that 48 met an accidental death during the year.

LAWS NEEDED TO CURB EVIL.

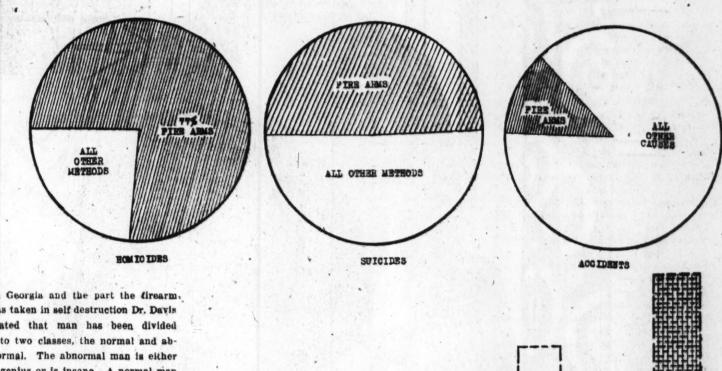

The part the deadly pistol plays in the commission of murder in Georgia is best shown by an official report sent The Constitution from the state prison farm. The prisoners at the farm are constantly received and transferred and in order to obtain an impartial report, no specific date was requested. An investigation at the prison on December 14 showed that 288 male prisoners were registered. Of this number, 153 were white and 135 negroes. Ninety-five of the total number were convicted of murder of some degree.

Eighty-two used pistols to commit their crimes!

There were 175 female prisoners at the farm on this date. Thirty were white and 145 negroes. Seventy-two were convicted of murder.

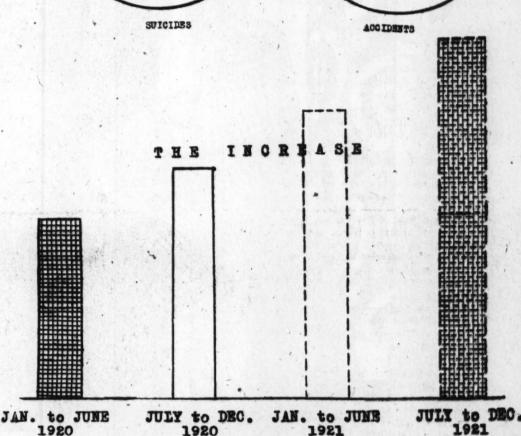

Fifty-nine of these committed their crimes with the deadly pistol!

Murder is on the increase in Georgia, according to the statistics of the state board as compiled by Dr. Davis, and unless some check is placed even larger figures will be recorded in Georgia during 1921. It is an indisputable fact that "pistol toting" results in a large percentage of these homicides, and it is the opinion of many state and court officials that the best means of checking murder in Georgia is to enact more rigid laws governing the sale and personal carrying of firearms.
